CONSTIPATION DOUSES YOUR FIRE

● You can't shine at work or play if you're troubled with constipation. And common constipation is not a necessary evil. Too little bulk in your diet often causes it. Foods like meat, bread and potatoes do not form the "bulky" mass the bowels need for regular movements. They become lazy. Eat Kellogg's ALL-BRAN, a crisp, delightful cereal. It helps to supply the "bulk" you need. And it is especially rich in Nature's intestinal tonic, Vitamin B_1. Try this sensible routine: Eat ALL-BRAN every day. And drink plenty of water. Discover how fine it feels to be "regular" again.

RACING DRIVER

By ALEXANDER CAMPBELL

Author of Daughter of Exile, etc.

"Two more laps to go," said Reddy "Oh, gosh, I hope he can make it!" He danced in agony.

The cars shot past.

"He'll DO it!"

Reddy screamed the words.

Once again, the British and Italian cars were racing neck and neck, with Hoffman at their heels. But this time the blue car was not wobbling. It seemed to be gaining speed at every second.

Dorothy Ellington, who had told Frank Carter that he was catering for thrill-mad crowds who did not know any better, found herself praying . . .

Long, agonising seconds passed.

Then a shout went up from the crowd rippling nearer and nearer. The cars were coming down into the straight, in the last lap.

"Come on!" shouted Reddy.

Hand in hand, like children, they raced out of the pits, climbed a grassy knoll, and looked panting down on the long straight finish.

The cars were coming fast—and the blue car was in the lead.

The Italian had shot his bolt. He began to slide back. Hoffman had disappeared—put out as they afterwards learned, by cylinder trouble half way round the last lap, so that he had to "walk home."

It was a decisive victory for the British car.

Carter roared down the straight towards the finishing line, with no chance of anyone passing him.

THEN TRAGEDY

Dorothy and Reddy found themselves dancing wildly together on top of their grassy knoll.

Then, over his shoulder, Reddy saw something. He released the girl and stepped back. His eyes glared As if it could have been heard in time, or at that distance, above the roaring engines of the car, he screamed:

"Guv'nor! Look out!"

Dorothy looked.

As Carter shot towards the finishing line, a child who had somehow escaped his parents wandered to the very edge of the track. A policeman saw him, shouted, and leaped—and missed.

The tot wandered on to the road . . .

For an instant the blue racing car was roaring down on the child, standing there frozen with sudden terror and bewilderment. There was no time to brake, to slow down.

Then the big blue cars swung at right angles, skidded violently, and shot off the road on to the rough ground at the side of the track.

It leaped like a live thing, with a shrill scream of tortured metal. It bounded, rebounded and somersaulted. A figure shot through the air. Then flames were leaping high in the air, and thick pungent smoke was pouring up against the hot blue sky.

Dorothy found herself running. She raced across grassy, uneven ground, fought desperately with people who got in her way.

They were all running in the same direction, hundreds of them.

The blue car was a blazing mass of wreckage. What had been one of the proudest creations of man, an intricate piece of gleaming machinery, was tortured and twisted metal.

A cordon of police had been formed, and they were trying to keep the crowds back.

One of them barred Dorothy's way. "Sorry, miss," he began.

She ducked under his arm and ran on.

The heat of the car came out in a wave and almost blinded her. She skirted it and put one hand across her eyes and made for the spot where she had seen that flying figure fall.

Frank lay on the ground. His arms were outstretched. Blood from a cut in his forehead had trickled down past his goggles. His eyes seemed to be closed.

Dorothy threw herself on her knees beside him. She seized his shoulders.

"Frank!" she shouted. "Frank!"

A sob was torn from her throat

"Oh, darling, you mustn't die. I love you!"

LOVE ACTS STRANGELY

Six weeks before, Frank Carter had wakened up after a crash, to find a lovely girl bending over him.

He had reflected that, if this were heaven, he liked it.

But the lovely girl had spoken coldly. She had been aloof and detached. The only interest she had seemed to take in him was a scientific one. She had observed him as cold-bloodedly as a student observes a frog.

Now he woke up again, to find the same girl bending over him. But she was the same only in her loveliness. Tears streamed down her cheeks.

And a cry lingered divinely in his ears.

"I love you!"

"Darling murmured Frank.

He found he had just sufficient strength to raise himself and kiss her on the mouth. Then he sank back, and the mists of unconsciousness closed over him once again.

A man, carrying a black bag, broke through the crowd.

"Doctor!" Dorothy turned swiftly to him. Through her tears, she was smiling happily over that caress. "Is he all right? Is he badly hurt? Will he——"

The medical man shot her a keen glance.

"Fiance?" he murmured. "Ah, yes of course!"

Dorothy did not contradict him. She looked at him with mute appeal.

The doctor was running his hands over Carter's recumbent body.

"H'm!" he murmured. "Don't seem to be any bones broken." Unconsciously he echoed Professor Ellington's remark of six weeks ago. "Lucky young devil!"

"He straightened up. "I don't think you have anything to worry about, May be slight concussion, I'll swear there's no more. Ah! here's the ambulance."

"Doctor!" Dorothy rose swiftly. "May I go with him?"

"Certainly!" He nodded heartily. "That will probably be the very best thing."

The doctor proved a shrewd diagnostician. Frank had had a lucky escape. No bones were broken, and there was no concussion. Professor Ellington, visiting him in hospital, suggested that he give up the idea of accompanying the expedition to the Drakensberg.

Two days later, Carter would probably have agreed. He would have been glad of the excuse to get out of a situation that had become intolerable.

Now he shook his head emphatically.

"Not at all, sir. I'll be as right as rain. I wouldn't miss it for anything. When does the ship leave for Durban?"

"The Enfield," the professor told him, "sails on Saturday of this week."

"Then I'll be aboard — if your offer still holds?"

"Certainly, my boy," said Ellington. "Only too glad to have you."

That moment when he had recovered consciousness to find Dorothy bending over him had given Frank fresh hope. Things were far from clear in his mind. But he was sure now that she loved him. The mask was off at last, her defences were down, and the warm human girl who, he had always suspected, hid behind the armour was there for him to make his own, if he dared. And Frank felt in the mood for daring anything.

Only one thing worried him. Dorothy, since she had assured herself that he was not seriously hurt, had not been to see him. That also he was determined to put right.

Duchemin - Purtill Nuptials

The marriage took place Friday evening at St. Thomas Aquinas Glebe, Halifax, N.S., Rev. Father J.L. Quinan officiating, of Helen Audrey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D.J. Purtill and Rohan C. Duchemin, son of H.P. Duchemin, K.C., and Mrs. Duchemin of Sydney.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, made a lovely picture in her mother's wedding gown of ivory lace, made with a bustle back effect, and trimmed with seed pearls. Her train length veil of lace fell from a comet of orange blossoms, and she carried an arm bouquet of calla lilies. Her only ornament was a string of pearls given to her mother by her father on her wedding day and worn by her on that occasion.

Mrs. Harry Chapplin, of Sydney, sister of the groom, was the bride's matron of honor, and wore a French blue taffeta frock, made on picture lines and a silver lace hat trimmed with French blue flowers and floor length streamers, She carried a bouquet of pink and blue cornflowers.

Miss Merle Purtill, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid, and wore a frock of hedge rose taffeta made on the same lines as the matron of honor's. Her silver lace hat was trimmed with matching rose flowers and streamers, and she carried a bouquet of pink and blue cornflowers.

The groom was supported by Frank MacDougall, and the other member of the wedding party was Professor George F. Curtis.

Reception Held

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, Bloomingdale Terrace. Mr. and Mrs. Purtill and Mrs. H.P. Duchemin, mother of the groom, received with the bride and groom. Mrs. Purtill wore a floor length gown of pearl grey chiffon and a corsage of fuschia coloured flowers. Mrs. Duchemin chose a Queen's Blue gown and wore a corsage of pink flowers. Tea was poured by Mrs. B.E. Fanjoy, New Glasgow, and Mrs. P.S. Campbell of Halifax. The toast to the bride was proposed by B. Eaton Paterson, a cousin of the bride.

Later Mr. and Mrs. Duchemin left on a motor trip, the bride travelling in a nordic blue sheer wool dress, a nordic blue coat, trimmed with grey squirrel, a matching blue hat with grey ostrich feather trimming, and grey accessories. They will make their home in Halifax.

Out of town guests who attended the reception were Lloyd Duchemin, Mrs. H. P. Duchemin and Mrs. Harry Chapplin of Sydney, Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh McDorman, Mr. and Mrs. James MacNeill, Mr. and Mrs. James Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. H.H. Heckman, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Blackader, and Miss Ray Blackader, Dr. and Mrs. J.A. Milne, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Fanjoy, Mrs. Charles MacNeill, and Miss Ina Ross of New Glasgow.

The groom is a nephew of Mr. A.C. Duchemin and Mr. Ernest Duchemin of Charlottetown.

BOOTS ETERNAL

CHARLBURY, England —(CP)— There always were boots —and heavy boots —in the armies of Britain. Remains of hob-nailed boots were found on the skeleton of a Roman soldier buried near here 2,000 years ago.
