SKYWAY LOVERS By VERA BROWN

Alison asked more questions, but seemed reluctant to tell her much. Traffic was heavy and slow. The heat of New Brunswick day was oppressive.

Facing a Suspect The police headquarters the two officers took Alison directly to the squad room. As she came in she saw Steve and he greeted her encouragingly. But only nodded. Inspector O'Rourke was there.

Miss Thayer, since Burke was yet back in town, you seem to be the logical person to identify Alison with a nice picnic. "I'm sitting him so quickly. I know he was on his way to Egan, like this Weston chap."

Larry had got away. Alison knew what that meant, but she felt relieved for him. At least she was getting away from all this. Don't tell Miss Thayer what you know about North, one of the detectives warned Steve as he was about to go into the next office the detective took Alison here, with her late afternoon sunlight streaming into the windows, that a woman a man. She was a pretty creature of about 30 and she obviously was weeping. The man stared at her with lighted eyes. She was a fairly tall, quiet. A mousey person. He had gray hair, maturely gray, Alison felt. She had a faint smile on her face. She glanced at the glimpse she had had of him on the ship. That's not the man, inspector. No, no, it's the man, inspector. No, no, it's the man, inspector. No, no, it's the man, inspector.

North burst into sobs and looked immensely relieved. He looked at Alison and she looked at him. They were never over and over the ground. Sit down, he said to Alison. Now, you say the radio your car was broken and that did not know we were hunting you. I've checked with the chief of the summer cottage in Combermere and you were there, you willing to help us? Yes, sir, in every way! I know, but this isn't the man. Now!

What North Told Police With a pause, there seemed to be in his eyes. "I haven't any I tell you my wife and I the children started out about 11 o'clock that night. That's all now. North burst in. "It is terrible. My husband and I were at the cottage all the time. He's a hard working man. He's here for him to be mixed in this. What is it, what is it at the bank? A lot of any of you did care? Mrs. North. But this is our husband's name. The address was given by that fellow on the plane. We've got to find out. Somebody else gave it. My husband was with you and I want to know who? Tell you he's a perfect hunk. He works so hard, sometimes three nights a week. I give you the comfort of this when self-respecting people treated like this! To be taken from your home, away from the children and brought here. North sobbed wildly. The inspector sat quiet for a long time, saying nothing. North had turned white. It was obvious that he had struck terror into his mind. He was managed to speak. He said over and patted her hand. Wonder, inspector, if I could tell you anything? Alison, the inspector nodded. Alison, the inspector nodded. Alison, the inspector nodded.

Do You Want "Good" Children? Dorothy Dix Eight Rules for Mothers

Don't Overdo the Mother Business - You Should Adopt Moderation, Cultivate Firmness, Have a Sense of Humor and be a Diplomat

A young woman with her first baby asks me what qualities she should cultivate in order to be a good mother. Well, to a large extent, the old line of maternal virtues of meekness, patience and self-control that have been lauded so long in song and story are being discarded.

We have discovered that the angel mother's children generally develop into hellions and that the woman who turns out a crop of spoiled brats is Public Enemy No. 1. Also, that there is more profit in bringing up children who do not have a light kept burning in the window than it is to tend a lamp for years and years, waiting for wayward sons and daughters to return home.

Remember what Bernard Shaw said about a woman, that she was so much a mother she was scarcely human. Don't be like her and become one of the women who are all mother and no wife, who give up their friends and club social contacts for the baby; who never read anything but the baby book or have any talk except about baby formulas and diets, and who get to be intolerable bores even to their children.

Cultivate a SENSE OF PROPORTION. Try to see your children as they really are. That is the only way you can help them correct their faults and develop whatever talents they have. The fact that Mother saw her ugly duckling as a swan has kept many a lovely girl from marrying and from being taught how to dress herself as to camouflage her defects. And because Mother persisted in believing Tom a genius when he was slow and dull-witted has prevented many a boy from getting the special training that would have made him a success instead of a failure in life.

Cultivate a BACKBONE. Develop your intestinal fortitude to the nth degree. You need in dealing with children. Learn to be hard-boiled with them. When you say "no" stick to it, for in that way alone can you gain your children's respect and have influence with them.

Cultivate a SENSE OF HUMOR. Don't take your children too seriously. Half of the faults that you lie awake at nights worrying over they will outgrow if you will just give them a little time for getting the lot of the scrapes that they get themselves into instead of making tragedies of them. There is nothing that children so adore in their Mother as her being jolly and good-natured, and nothing they resent so much as Mother being gloomy and nagging.

Cultivate your GOOD LOOKS. Go to beauty shops. Dress up for your children. Don't put all of the clothes' money on your girls' backs. Use some of it on your own. Children like to be proud of their Mother and she has far more influence with them if she is up-to-date looking than she does if she is dowdy.

Make yourself the QUEEN OF THE HOME and not the slave. Make your children look up to you and serve you. Make them consider you. Every mother writes her own price tag for her children, and as long as they live they treat her exactly as she has taught them to treat her. The mother who has kept herself on a pedestal will be worshipped by her children. The mother who has made a doormat of herself for her children will always be kicked around and trampled upon.

And, finally, and above all, keep yourself MODERN. Keep up with your children. Speak their language. See things from their point of view. Because in that way only can you hold them in the right road when they need a steady hand upon them.

Don't think that everything they want to do is wrong because you didn't do it when you were a girl. So many things are just a matter of custom instead of principle. You can't keep your children from doing what all the other children are doing, but you can modify what they do if you are good friends with them. And that is the final test of motherhood - Being your children's best friend.

Dear Miss Dix-A few years ago I became a strict member of a creed different from that of my parents or relatives, and I am troubled because I can't make my people embrace my religion, and unless I save them how are they to spend eternity with me? My husband has left me rather than be by my side in this struggle. My only brother might be persuaded to join me except for his wife, who would leave him if he did, so he goes with her and follows her creed and they work so hard for their religion. I know they would be much happier in mine. My only sister and her family won't have me around because I am trying to spread my gospel. They are also workers in another creed. Why can't they see the true way with me? What can I do to save these who are so dear to me? ALONE.

TRIAL THE NEW IMPROVED PALMOLIVE

What makes you so sure that you alone are right in your religious belief and that all of your family and friends, who are intelligent men and women, are wrong and incapable of choosing their own creed?

Evidently you have forgotten that this Nation was founded by men and women who fled to what was then a far and unknown land, but who, having fled, they were willing to brave the perils of wilderness according to the dictates of their own consciences. This might the Constitution of the United States still guarantees to us, and I advise you to respect it. DOROTHY DIX.
