DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

consequently it became so important to him that he built himself up as a material success in your eyes.

Marrying a man who has never known the warmth of a family produces many complications for a girl. She must teach him what most people have already learned—how to create a home, with all its component and complex relationships.

If you love your fiance enough to understand the reason behind his apparently infantile bragging, to make allowances for his ignorance of daily family living, you will doubtless reap a rich reward in his appreciative response. You, and you alone, can be the judge of that problem.

DEAR MISS DIX: I am a very lonely girl of 13. My friends say I'm attractive and, while I have some boy friends, I have no girl chum. When I see girls going for walks on Sunday, I feel very lonely, since I'm left at home. How can I find a girl friend?

ANSWER: As you requested, I omitted part of your letter, from which I gather that you are very particular about the kind of friends you choose. Such discernment is praiseworthy indeed, but it is bound to limit your friendships. You will find, however, that when you do make friends, they are of above average character, and will remain loyal and true long after more casually acquired pals would forget you.

Remain true to your ideals, even though it means occasional loneliness for you.

Are you sure you have no traits that would tend to make you unpopular with girls? Do you brag of your boy friends, but too much stress on your own attractiveness, neglect to defer to the opinion of others? Any of these faults will keep friends away from you; remember, the kind of people you want to attract will be just as discriminating about the company they keep as you are.

DEAR MISS DIX: My husband and I have two boys, 6 and 2 1/2. We would like very much to have a little girl, as we feel she would make our family circle complete. Another child of our own might be a boy so we wonder if we could adopt a little girl about 4 or 5 years old. Do you think an agency would give us a child under these circumstances?

ANSWER: Yours is the most fantastically ridiculous proposition I've encountered in a long time. Since you are capable of having children of your own, thank God for the privilege and take them as they come. There is nothing unbalanced in an all-boy or an all-girl family. Either one is fine, as thousands of parents whose children are all of one sex would be happy to affirm.

There aren't enough adoptive children to go around now, and it would be most unfair of you to deprive a childless couple of a youngster they need much more than you do.

I doubt very much if a reputable agency would give you a girl under these circumstances. For one thing, your attitude in the matter shows a mental quirk that would be an immediate stumbling block to an adoption.
