

No Aid From Europe Seen For U.S. In Vietnam War

LONDON (AP)—The United States can write off hopes of getting troops or military aid from European allies for its Vietnam war effort.

This is clear in a survey of NATO countries which have shown sympathy with the U.S. but have shied away from direct involvement.

Britain and West Germany have sent sizable material assistance but emphasize the non-military aspects of the aid to South Vietnam. From others have come token assistance, mostly medical supplies from private agencies.

Officials generally passed over U.S. State Secretary Dean

Rusk's comment in Paris last week: "Of course we'd be glad to see help from any quarter, of any sort, in Vietnam."

Rusk's remarks were to correspondents who asked about the need for European manpower in Vietnam.

NO HELP FROM WILSON

British Prime Minister Wilson, overriding a strong bloc in his Labor party, has expressed broad support for the U.S. position in Vietnam, but any idea of sending troops has long been ruled out.

Wilson publicly criticized U.S. bombings of targets in the North Vietnamese areas of Hanoi and the port of Haiphong and "disassociated" his government from them.

British aid has been mainly training the South Vietnamese in police work and internal security methods and techniques and technical assistance in water-purifying and agricultural work.

Here is how other European allies stand:

1. Italy has given no aid to South Vietnam and none can be expected in the foreseeable future, although Premier Aldo Moro has repeatedly expressed "understanding" of the American position.

2. Norway has furnished no aid to Vietnam and sources say none can be expected. The official attitude of the government is that while it reluctantly supports the U.S. it feels a military solution is impossible and the war must be settled at the conference table.

3. The Belgian government gave nine scholarships to the South Vietnamese this year and the Belgian-American Association gave an ambulance.

HAS TURK SYMPATHY

4. Turkey has been officially quiet about Vietnam, but behind the scenes has sympathized with Washington. Turkey has made no contribution to the U.S. effort, however.

5. West Germany sent $3,750,000 worth of material aid to South Vietnam this year and is expected to increase this to $6,100,000 in 1967. The West Germans also contributed a hospital-ship, Helgoland, to treat injured civilians.

6. Denmark furnished approximately $10,500 worth of medical aid to South Vietnam this year through the International Red Cross. The Danish government has given seemingly reluctant support to the U.S., setting off anti-American demonstrations.
