Shipbuilding Dean Dies In Shelburne

SHELburne, N.S. (CP) — John Harris McKay, often described as the dean of shipbuilding on Canada's east coast, died in hospital here Saturday following a stroke. He was 85.

A native of Shelburne, he was one of the few remaining craftsmen known as master shipbuilders.

He began his career late in the 19th century when he apprenticed under his father, the late Winslow McKay, in the Shelburne firm of McGowan Shipyards Ltd. After a period at sea as a carpenter aboard the fisheries patrol schooner Osprey, Mr. McKay went to Boston where he studied naval architecture for seven years.

He returned to Shelburne in 1908 and with his father founded the firm of W.C. McKay and Sons Ltd.

During almost 65 years in the shipbuilding business, Mr. McKay launched or helped launch 180 vessels, ranging from three-masted schooners to today's modern, electronically equipped draggers.

He was a direct descendant of Donald McKay, a native of nearby Jordan Falls, who became known as the father of the famous copper ship of the 19th century. The elder McKay was regarded internationally as North America's foremost designer and builder of sailing ships.

SURVIVED ATTACK
The Gladys Hallett, one of Mr. McKay's biggest ships, withstood a submarine attack during the First World War. A German U-boat sent a torpedo into the vessel's lumber-filled holds, but failed to sink her.

Tariffs Are Seen Slanted Against British Imports

By DON ANGUS
HALIFAX (CP) — Lord Thomson of Fleet took a detached look at crucial British economic problems here and chided Canadians for discriminating against the imports of a country that "bled herself white" in two world wars.

The 71-year-old ruler of a vast newspaper, radio and television empire and he could view trade disparities between the two nations as a dispassionate Briton and native Canadian. Lord Thomson, born in Toronto became a peer in 1964.

He told more than 500 guests at a testimonial dinner for Maritime brewer Col. Sidney C. Oland that it is a generally accepted belief in Britain "that Canadian customs duties have been slanted to discriminate against British imports. The information I get on the matter certainly supports this allegation."

Lord Thomson said Canada has used the principle of "fair market value for home consumption" to bar many British products, and "Britain can no longer undertake to pay scarce dollars to Canada for a large imbalance of trade."

SHOWS IMBALANCE
In the period 1962-64 Britain bought $3,600,000,000 worth of goods from Canada, while Canada bought $1,700,000,000 worth of British commodities he said.

"Canada should do everything it can to help the country that 'bled herself white' in two world wars to save the world, including Canada. Canadians should go out of their way to buy British."

The United Kingdom's economic future is intrinsically tied to Europe, the newspaper baron said, but "if it proves impossible for Britain to get in with Europe she cannot afford to be left out on her own with the Commonwealth," which Britain has always considered as its natural trading area.

"Most of the Commonwealth nations are so-called 'new nations'. They do not have any large trading capacity... such exports as Britain is able to make to these nations do not provide any immediate cash relief."

FAVOR ATLANTIC UNION
Lord Thomson said an economic union of the North Atlantic, as suggested by Senator Jacob Javits of New York during a recent visit to Britain, would be an attractive alternative to membership in the European Common Market.
