

Strong Economic Medicine Seen Possible After Vote

By FORBES RHUDE

Canada Press Business Editor... The business community, like other Canadians, spent the last week caught up in the excitement of election forecasting.

Perhaps more than most people, however, business men and women are speculating on what the coming months may hold regarding the state of government is at the helm after the voting.

One question being asked is: "Has the day of reckoning arrived in regard to Canada's long-continuing balance of payments deficits and international indebtedness? And if so, what strong medicine may have to be administered by the government to stop them?"

In general, today's economic climate in Canada and elsewhere seems to be one of reality rather than wishful thinking, with the most dramatic illustration of this being given by the stock markets. In this area the most popular question seems to be:

"What is a company earning, rather than 'what does it hope to do a few years from now'?"

The long-neglected price-earnings yardstick is once more looked at with respect, especially as stocks with a good showing according to this measurement are standing up best.

PALACE GUARD IGNORES HURT

LONDON (Reuters) — A woman visitor to London led out a shriek Saturday as she stood watching the rock-steady guards outside St. James' Palace.

Blood was flowing from the hand of one of the sentries, where he had cut himself on his bayonet, but the sentry stood immobile, eyes fixed ahead, and upper lip stiff.

The woman who shrieked was a nurse who had bandaged the guard's hand with a handkerchief.

But he did not move until a police constable had told the orderly officer. A replacement was marched out and the wounded guard marched off with his head high.

Peerages are Ruled Out As British Tories Side

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON LONDON (AP) — Quietly the word has spread among Conservative party ranks and the members in the House of Commons.

Harold says peerages are out this year. This means Prime Minister Macmillan does not want to deplete his ranks by letting elected members accept honors moving them over to the House of Lords.

A change in voting grounds is being spread among British, and the result could be a change in Britain's relations with the United States.

The Labor party has gained strength in special elections and is bidding to unseat Macmillan in the next general election. It is pledged to move toward a more middle-of-the-road position in the cold war away from U.S. views.

COMPARE PARTIES Labor supporters are Socialized, to the left of the Conservatives, who are in effect a conservative party although they have accepted many elements of the welfare state.

In between, the Liberal party seeks to make the best of both ends of the political spectrum. They hold only seven seats today in the 630-member House of Commons, but have emerged as a possible third force manning the two-party system's tide gauges.

Recent by-election results point to disenchantment with Liberal policies and with the feuding Socialists. But the Socialists still remain strong on the broad shoulders of the giant labor union.

The pattern holds good in the next general election—due by 1964—the Conservatives will be out and the labor party in.

CONSERVATIVES AND ALLIES

Conservatives and allies now hold 366 seats, Labor 255, Liberals 7 and Independents one, with one seat vacant.

Mid-term voting, however, rarely is a safe guide to general elections. Macmillan can choose his own good time in the next two years to take to the hustings.

Part of the prime minister's time is mortgaged to the outcome of Britain's negotiations to join the European Common Market. He is captive of those negotiations until he knows the result.

If Britain's bid succeeds, Macmillan can represent the linkup with Europe as the start of a new era of prosperity. If it fails he can put out a resounding call for a closing of national ranks to meet grave crises ahead.

Neither Labor nor Liberal party oppose entry into Europe's trade group. Labor is waiting to see what sorts of agreements emerge and will attack it if it seems Britain gets a poor deal.

Last ruled in the six post-war elections in 1951. If the party led by Hugh Gaitskell regains power it will be free from the austerity policies that allowed it in the aftermath of war. It also will be free from most of its electoral pledges to nationalize certain basic industries.

The coal mines, public utilities, airlines and the Bank of England and health services were taken over when Clement (now Lord) Attlee was prime minister.

Britain's Socialists today are more reformers than radicals. Against left-wing protest they are trying under Gaitskell's leadership to present an image of moderation.

A foreign policy goal of Gaitskell supporters is renunciation of Britain's nuclear deterrent as a first step towards formation of a non-nuclear club of countries shunning all but classical weapons.

Labour would be honor-bound if it came to power to loosen ties with the U.S. but not to quit the Atlantic alliance and other treaty organizations. It was Labor that led Britain into NATO in the first place.

AMERICAN DEFENCE SECRETARY SPELLS OUT NUCLEAR STRATEGY

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP)—Defence Secretary McNamara spelled out Saturday night the nuclear strategy the United States would use if major war broke out unless driven to it by Soviet action.

At the same time, he challenged, without naming names, President de Gaulle's plan for France to go it alone with her own nuclear weapons and strategy.

He raised questions about the dangers created by a relatively weak nuclear nation, including the possibility that its very weakness might invite a preventive attack by Russia.

McNamara set forth his views in a speech prepared for the University of Michigan commencement.

White Slavery Claims Made By Showgirls During Probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two blond showgirls testified here Tuesday night club employers tried to force them into white slavery.

She said she escaped the white slavery "party because I was a star and because I refused."

"In Cleveland," she said, "you either mix or you get hit over the head—and you get no commission."

Mrs. Stels said most customers at such clubs were degenerates. She said she now works only in burlesque theaters.

Another witness was Joan Gainsley, New York character actress and dancer who said she got into night club entertainment because she was broke but never did get to be a "good mixer."

Miss Gainsley told of working at the Club in Calumet City as a dancer and singer.

"Did they try to force you into prostitution?" asked the subcommittee's lawyer, Jerome Adlerman.

"Yes," she replied. "The sad many of the entertainers appeared to be 'young girls' who apparently entered into prostitution willingly."
