Drug Ruling Expected Soon

BATTLE AP—The U.S. Food and Drug Administration's long-awaited ruling on the edibility of a protein concentrate made from whole fish is expected soon, a newspaper said Tuesday.

The Seattle Times said those observers expect the decision will be to permit human consumption of the "fish flour" which now is produced only as food for pets and farm animals.

Sen. Warren G. Magnuson confirmed that food and drug experts have completed testing of the product and method of production proposed by the Bureau of Commercial Fisheries and said "I am very optimistic about this ruling."

Marine protein concentrate—MPC—is the name adopted for the new product, which would have a major impact on world nutrition and the Pacific northwest's fishing industry.

Large populations of hake off Washington and Oregon and inside Puget Sound are expected to provide a major source of raw material for MPC.

While the whole fish is used for the flour-like concentrate, the end product virtually is colorless, tasteless and odorless.
