JINGLES AND JESTS.

In Passing. Bithely down our college lane Comes my Mildred, "don't rain Sweetest rose now washed to rain. Showing 'neath her bonnet's flare Glancing eyes of deepest blue (safely shaded from the glare) As she trips the avenue.

Will she look this way again? Does she guess how straits stare When her very presence there Breathes a fragrance like the dew On a field of ripened grain? As she trips the avenue?

Then at last, when I am faint To the fellow standing there, Just to note—oh, my despair! Not the fellow standing there, But herself, from hat to shoe, With a swift but loving care As she trips the avenue.

L'Evoy. Mildred, love was watching thee, Watching, waiting, dear for thee, But you pressed him unaware As you tripped the avenue. —Town Topics.
