MARY HAWORTH

Drama Student Seeks Key To Acting Fame

Dear Mary Haworth: I am a person who has an actor's heart but lacks a certain TV program, for example "Bonanza," and I want to get a part in the show, how would the role be about it?

The reason I am asking is one of my subjects at school is dramatics. Our teacher, in giving us an examination recently, suggested that I find the answer to the above question. I am hoping you can help me.

R.D. Dear R.D.: To have a glimpse of getting a part in a show already enjoying a successful run, you'd have to be a show-biz expert, a "tie" to handle the role, when, as and if the casting director found it necessary to supply an emergency replacement.

Unless you were a trained understudy, already in line for the role, there is little chance that you would be considered.

There is, however, no routine way of breaking into the theater world. Everyone who makes the grade has had to pioneer his or her own way in, using brains, charm, luck, perseverance and drive.

But to give you an adequate answer to your question, I suggest that you watch the next run-through of your favorite TV show, and at the close, during the fadeout music, when the credit lines are screened, copy the name of the director, the producing studio and the actor whose role you want. Then mail your job-application to the director, c/o the producing studio, or c/o the TV network, at its local or national headquarters address.

My husband always has worked with women and taken a personal interest in their affairs, which never bothered me. But towards this one I am very jealous, though I feel he should be compassionate to her.

How would she best be helped? I'm in a bind, narrowed and childish in my jealous feelings, which I seem unable to control.

Dear D.E.: I gather you've tried to get next in the woman, I take her measure, or block her play for your husband, and she has given you the headfirst, I'm sure, meeting someone, taking a phone call, etc., anything to squelch your over-zeal.

As I get the picture, your husband is making a mistake, he's doing wrong in becoming her buddy, in guise of helping her. I think you know and she knows she is building for a personalized relationship with him that is an end. And you are beginning to feel a portion of his energies of time, interest, devotion, etc. are yours should be at your disposal.

Actually you aren't so jealous after all. In the handbook the harm she is doing your husband's integrity, clouding his eyes, and making him "a divided" in sympathies. How would she best be helped? By your husband having the good sense to wash his hands of her, and repeat the same to her, concerned in encouraging her to look on him in ways that are not in his interest. M.D.

Mary Haworth counsels through her column, not by mail or person. I'd been wearing it in care of the Guardian.

"JUST because a food has been used for generations, centuries, even millenniums, does not make it obsolete," exclaimed the Chef. "For example, the apple, a valuable source of vitamins, and we've used apples ever since."

"Wheat was grown long before the time of the Pharaohs. It has been used for one of our most elegant pastries."

"And Chef sauerkraut has been preserved by fermentation from time immemorial, yet it is recognized today for its refreshing and valuable source of vitamins, and it is inexpensively sold canned, or packaged in plastic."
