SAVED BY HIS HORSE.

THE ANIMAL DETECTED THE PRESENCE OF THE SNAKE.

A Reptile Far More Dangerous Than the Rattlesnake—It Is the American Asp, Whose Bite is Death—Fortunately It Is Very Rare.

The southwest is more liberally supplied with venomous things than any other area in the union. In the burning deserts, in the inhabited but arid expanses of New Mexico and Arizona, the rattlesnake abounds, and in several varieties, including the strange and deadly "sidewinder," crotolus cerastes. The so-called tarantula—really only a gigantic bush spider, but none the less dangerous because of the misnomer—is decidedly common. Scorpions are none too rare in the southern portions of the territories, and in all parts centipedes of seven to eight inches long are frequent and neighborly. But the chief distinction of the region in this respect is the presence of the pichu-cuate, the deadliest snake in North America.

The pichu-cuate matches the worst serpent of India. Not only the most highly-venomous, but the tiniest and the most treacherous, he would be also the most dangerous—but, luckily, he is the rarest. He is the only true asp on this continent; and in the United States is never found outside of New Mexico and Arizona. That he was also known to the ancient Mexicans is apparent from his name—pichu-coatl, an Aztec word, which was brought up to our territory by the Spanish conquerors.

My first meeting with one, writes C. F. Lummis in the New York Sun, was in Valencia county, N.M., in June, 1890, on the sandy flanks of the Cerro del Aire. I was out hunting jackrabbits, in company with some Indian friends, and had dismounted to stalk, leading my pet horse by the bridle. My eyes were on a small chapparo bush ahead, when suddenly Alazan snorted, and reared backward so violently as to almost unhinge my arm. I looked about in surprise, for Alazan was too good a horse to mind trifles. As there was nothing to be seen, I started to pull him forward. Again he protested and with evident terror, and chancing to look at my very feet, I understood his fear, and felt very grateful that his senses were better than mine, for in another step I should have walked upon my death.

The only thing visible was a tiny object, not nearly so large as a good stag beetle—merely a head, and perhaps an inch of neck. But it was the most frightful object in its kind that I had ever seen. The head, certainly neither so broad or so long as my thumbnail, had a shape and air of condensed malignity impossible to describe. It seemed the very essence of wickedness and hate, fairly bulging with deadly spite, and growing upon one until it looked several times its actual size. The ugly triangle (which is the distinguishing mark of all venomous snakes, being formed by the poison gland back of each eye) told me at once that Alazan was keeping up his reputation—never did he shy at a harmless snake—and the tiny horns, which added a peculiar and grotesque hideousness, left no doubt that this was a pichu-cuate. He had buried himself almost to the head in the gray sand, against which his upper skin was barely distinguishable, and thus in ambush was waiting for something to turn up.

Turning Alazan loose, I knelt at the safe distance of a yard to study the little creature, which fairly swelled with murderous rage. It not only struck madly at the chapparo switch I thrust out to it, but at last, evidently discerning that the blame lay back of the switch, actually followed it up, and with such agility that I had to jump up and back without loss of time. The idea of retreat never seemed to enter that flat head. Sometimes he would lie and puff out with impotent rage, throwing his mouth so wide open that it seemed the venom must start, and sometimes be glided toward me, his head an inch above the ground, with an attitude which seemed to say: "Stand still there and we'll see who laughs!"

At last I killed him. He was neither larger round nor longer than an ordinary lead pencil; a cold, leaden gray on the back, but underneath rosy as the mouth of a conch shell. The fangs were tiny, not much more than an eigth of an inch long, and as delicate as the thinnest needle. A wondrous mechanism, this mouth, with its two automatic needles, so infinitesimal yet so perfectly competent! I opened the ugly little jaws wide, pressing upon the sides of the head, and when the recurving fangs had risen from their grooves in the roof of the mouth and stood tense, a stream so inconceivably fine that the eye could barely note it spurted from each, and in the space of two or three inches melted into invisible spray. Yet that jet, finer than a cobweb, strand, was enough to give swift death to the largest and strongest animal that walks.

When the hunt was over I told my Indian chums of the pichu-cuate, and asked them many questions. They all knew of the snake, though several had never seen one, and all agreed that it is extremely rare. The crotalus ranks among the Pueblo divinities, and their charmers have no difficulty with that steady-going and respectable reptile. But even among these people with whom the cult of the rattlesnake has such astounding features, and where until recent years every Pueblo kept a sacred rattlesnake in a sacred room, with special priests to attend him, the villainous little sand viper is accursed. Even those who have "the power of the snakes" can do nothing with him, he scorns to be tamed even by the dropping upon his head of the mystic pollen of the corn blossom.

And he was more dangerous than the rattlesnake? Oh, yes! A thousand times worse than ch'a-ra-ra-deh! No one ever got well if the pinch-cuate bit him. Even a medicine man once, who knew all the sacred herbs, and so was proof against snakes, brought a pichu-cuate in his blanket to the Pueblo to tame it. But when he let it out upon the floor and sang to it up it struck him in the wrist, and he fell down and died in the time one could count fifty.

A Story of Charles Dickens.

Charles Dickens once received an invitation to a "Walter Scott' party, each guest being expected to appear in the character of one or the other of Scott's heroes. On the eventful night, however, Dickens appeared in simple evening dress. The host asked him which of Scott's characters he represented. "Why, sir," replied Dickens, "I am a character you will find in every one of Scott's novels. I am the 'gentle reader.'"

DONAHOE'S MAGAZINE.—Donahoe's Magazine continues to blaze the way to mutual appreciation and honest friendship between Christian Americans, Catholic and Protestant. Its spirit, infused month after month into an ever-growing and enthusiastic constituency, must make for better conditions, social, political, and religious, in this country. Protestant periodicals may well follow the example set by Donahoe's, for with sectarian prejudice and class bigotries clouding the national vision, a clear view of existing political, social and economic evils is impossible. The leading article of Donahoe's this month is thoroughly in line with the great purpose of the magazine; it bears the title, "The Blessings of the A. P. A." The article itself is more striking even than the title. It is a fair and fearless exposition of present religious wrongs and political abuses, and will be remembered long after it is read. Another great feature in the July number of "After Death: the Catholic Church and Cremation," by Abbe Hogan, of Washington University, in which the position of the Catholic Church regarding the disposition of the dead is stated fully, for the first time, we believe, in an American periodical. There are plenty of light reading, pretty pictures, good poems, and some very thoughtful "Talks to the Typewriter" in this number.
