to Business, Honesty and Square Dealing, and prying
Cash every time, is what has placed
L. E. PROWSE

to the front of all competitors, in CLOTHING, HATS, &c.
He does not advertize to sell goods at cost, but he guarantees to sell from 10 to 25 per cent less than those who do advertize to sell at cost.
He does not try to deceive the people by making a big blow and offering paltry rewards, but tries to do things right and has the goods to back him up in what he advertizes.
He has now about 6,500 HATS and $4,000 worth of CLOTHING, which he guarantees to sell from 10 to 25 per cent less than any house in the trade. A lot of this Clothing was bought less than half price, and will be sold less than half price.
He does not ask the people to believe his advertisement until they see his prices; he knows then they will believe, and knows that the goods and prices back him up every time.
All goods freely shown, or sent to any part of the town.

To-night.
If I should die to-night,
My friends would look upon my quiet face,
Before they laid it in its resting place,
And deem that death had left it almost fair;
And laying snow-white flowers against my hair,
Would smooth it down with tearful tenderness,
And fold my hands with lingering caress,
Poor hands, so empty and so cold to-night!

If I should die to-night,
My friends would call to mind with loving thought
Some kindly deed the icy hand had wrought,
Some gentle word the frozen lips had said,
Errands on which the willing feet had sped;
The memory of my selfishness and pride,
And so I should be mourned and loved to-night.

If I should die to-night,
Even hearts estranged would turn once more to me,
Recalling other days remorsefully.
The eyes that chill me with averted glance,
Would look upon me as of yore, perchance,
And soften in the old familiar way;
For who could war with dumb, unconscious clay?

So I might rest, forgiven of all, to-night.

Oh, friends, I pray to-night,
Keep not your kisses for my dead, cold brow,
The way is lonely, let me feel them now,
Think gently of me; I am travel-worn,
My faltering feet are pierced with many a thorn;

Forgive, O heart estranged, forgive, I plead!
When dreamless rest is mine, I shall not need
The tenderness for which I long to-night.

To the Seaside Hotel.

"Weary and worn," and glad to get away from the din dust of the city, we started on Wednesday evening last for the Seaside Hotel, Rustico Beach. The evening was delightful, and we had a spirited team, and experienced driver, and pleasant company, our journey was most enjoyable; and we nearly felt pang of regret when about three hours after starting, we were safely deposited at the Hotel.

The arrival of a batch of new comers makes quite a stir at the Seaside, and causes a rush to the veranda, in order to get a glimpse at them. When after being carefully scrutinized, it is duly decided, whether they are grave or gay, reserved or sociable.

On setting out, we followed the Malpeque Road to Milton, and thence crossed over the country to Wheatly River, then took the usual course, passing through the neat and pretty village of Rustico, and keeping in sight the North Shore till we reached our destination. The whole country through which our route lay seemed like a vast garden.

On the right and on the left were immense fields of wheat, oats and potatoes—all giving promise of abundant yield, and which must gladden the heart of the husbandman.

The different farms and farm houses—with scarce an exception—showed not only evident signs of thrift, but also of neatness and taste. Nearly invariably a grove shelters the house, and the outbuildings and fences are carefully whitewashed every season. While costing little this both protects and greatly improves the appearance.

Strangers here speak in the very highest terms of the beauty and fertility of the Island. One American gentleman, who had visited nearly all lands, affirmed that there was no other spot in America equal to it, and that it compared favorably with the best cultivated parts of England.

Those who take delight in crying down P. E. Island, as the manner of some is, know very little whereof they speak, and in not a few instances have never been beyond it.

The Seaside Hotel has been greatly improved since last season. At large expense the proprietor has had it moved to a more eligible site. The present position of the hotel could hardly be surpassed. It stands "high and dry," with a beautiful grove at the rear and on each side, while the front commands a magnificent view of Rustico harbor and the Gulf beyond. The new wing just added to the hotel greatly improves its appearance, besides adding sixteen bedrooms and enlarging the dining room, so that eighty can now sit down together at the tables. The "Seaside" has this season enjoyed a largely increased amount of patronage. The hotel is under excellent management. The provisions are fresh and well cooked, and the attendance all that could be desired. Special mention must be made of the fresh fish, which are fresh indeed; also of the butter and cream. There is no illicit liquor selling going on in any obscure part of the building. No matter what the profits, the proprietor would not enter into such a business, and we are safe in saying that it would be an offence to a large majority of the guests. There are recreations and amusements suitable both for the strong and the weak, such as surfing, sailing, rowing and fishing. The bowling alley is also well patronized, the ladies taking an active part in this healthful amusement. And it is worthy of note that a young lady of Charlottetown, Miss Blanche Haviland, has proved herself the best ployer of all the fair ones at the Seaside, by winning the prize offered for the highest number of marks. The evenings are spent very pleasantly. The ladies sing in the drawing room, and also discourse sweet music on the piano, while the gentlemen repair for a time to the reading room, where, after eagerly devouring the latest news, discuss important questions affecting the welfare of the country. To show the wide range of these discussions, we may mention a few of the themes: "The N. P." of course; "The Budget, will it ever be built, or has it been got up for political purposes"; "The causes of the Liberal victory at Chambly"; "Were the Government justified in hanging Riel," etc. It is amazing what vitality appears to be in Riel. Like "John Brown's soul," he seems to be "still marching on," and may yet upset a government before he stops. It may be observed that all the learned professions are represented here. The newspaper men from afar is also on the ground (though often in the water), and no doubt "tak'ni' notes." The merchant and trader, we suppose because they have the most money, are present in the greatest numbers. As a goodly number of the guests return every season, the occupants of the hotel seem like one large family, and a very happy one. While rank and wealth and culture are all represented, there is no stiffness or airs put on by any of the guests. Here "Captain" and "Professor" are as usual, and contribute largely to the pleasure of the company. Both are so full of "wit and wisdom" that they cannot contain it all—hence it is constantly overflowing for the benefit of the less highly favored. To any who are feeling over-worked or "run down," and who desire a change, a visit to this delightful retreat cannot fail to be of great benefit.

Seaside Hotel, Aug. 14, 1886. VIAFOR.

A Helpful Wife.

A calico printer at Manchester was persuaded by his wife, on their wedding day, to allow her a pint of ale a day. He was a "moderate" drinker himself, but he rather winced at the bargain. However, it was agreed to. Time passed on. They both worked hard. She had her daily pint, and he perhaps his two or three quarts. They had been married a year, and on the morning of their wedding anniversary the husband looked askance at the neat, comely person of his partner, with some shade of remorse, as he said:—

"Mary, we've had no holiday since we were wed; and, only that I've not a penny in the world, we'd take a jaunt down to the village to see the mother."

"Wouldst like to go, John," said she, softly, between a smile and a tear, so glad to hear him speak so kindly—so like old times. "If thee'd like to go, John, I'll stand treat."

"Thou stand treat!" said he, with half a sneer. "Has't got a fortun, wench?"

"Nay," said she, "but I've gotten the pint o' ale!" said he.

"A pint o' ale!" said she.

John still didn't understand her, till the faithful creature reached down an old stocking from under a loose brick up the chimney, and counted out her daily pint of ale in the shape of 305 threepences i. e., 24 1/2s. 3d., and put them into his hand exclaiming:—"Thou shalt have this holiday, John!"

John was ashamed, astonished, conscience stricken, charmed, and wouldn't touch it. "Has't thee had thy share? Then I'll no more!" he said. He kept his word. They kept their wedding day with mother, and the wife's little capital was the nucleus of a series of frugal investments, that ultimately swelled out into a shop, a factory, warehouse, a country seat and carriage.

Potato Water a Sure Cure for Rheumatism.

For the benefit of the large number who are suffering from rheumatism in this neighborhood we publish a sure cure as related to us by a gentleman who was so ill with this disease that his life was despaired of. He was confined to his bed, and so acute was his suffering that if a person walked across the room, it would cause him to scream out with pain. His wife heard that potato water was good, and as a last resort she put on half a peck of potatoes in an iron kettle over the stove and let them boil all to pieces. She then by dint of much labor and extreme pain on the part of her husband, got him up and put his feet in soak in the water, and the pain was relieved as if by magic. Cloths dipped in the hot potato water were then applied to his knees and other portions affected, and although the application almost killed him at first, so sensitive was the first touch, yet a moment's time saw the pain allayed and the patient was soon enjoying a sweet sleep. His recovery was speedy, and he has not had a severe attack of rheumatism since. We advise all our readers to give this simple but effective remedy a trial. The person who received such benefits has told of the remedy to many others, and in every instance it has proved successful.—Cape Ann Advertiser.

A Few Limitations.

A wealthy bachelor has just died in St. Petersburg, bequeathing his property in St. Petersburg and Moscow, as well as his stock and investments, to his nephew, though with curious provisos. Before he inherits any of the property the heir must give his word of honor that he will not smoke any longer either cigar, cigarette or pipe; that he will never again play cards; and that within six months of the proving of the will he will marry, so that he may not die an old bachelor like the testator. Three executors have been appointed, and in case the heir refuses to comply with the conditions they have the right to appropriate the property and divide it among their children. The first two engagements have already been entered into by the heir, though with unwillingness, but the third proviso threatens to be insuperable.

Railway Statistics.

According to statistics recently published in a German journal on the railway enterprise of the world, the aggregate mileage at the end of 1884 was 290,750 miles. Europe claimed of this total 117,694 miles; Asia 12,757 miles; Africa, 4,075; Australia, 148,738; and Australasia, 7,489.

More than 60 per cent. of the population of the world is in the countries of the railway age.
