MacLean united in marriage in a double ring ceremony, Violet Winnifred Dingwell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Dingwell, of Fortune Bridge and Raymond Dawson Hansen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hansen, Longworth Avenue, Charlottetown.

The lovely young bride wore a full skirted, ballerina length dress in white embroidered taffeta, with a corsage of red roses. Her only attendant was Miss Greta Hansen, sister of the groom. Her apricot taffeta dress was fashioned along the same lines as the bride's, and her corsage was of pink roses.

The groom was ably supported by Mr. George Mutch of Halifax, as best man.

The wedding was attended by immediate relatives of the bride and groom. Adding greatly to the happiness of the occasion was the fact that two grandmothers and a grandfather of the bride, Mrs. John H. MacKie, Sr., and Mr. and Mrs. Earl Dingwell, attended the wedding.

New Brochure Covers London's Art Houses

The Englishman, if he cannot be known by his works, can at least be recognized by his habits; and of these he has three. Wherever an Englishman may be, he will, in a very short while, start a club, produce a newspaper and open a museum.

London abounds with museums and art galleries, and owing to the generosity of patrons, bequests from the defunct and help from the National Art Collections fund their collections are indeed remarkable.

For this reason and to aid the Canadian visitor to London, the British Travel Association (90 Adelaide St. West, Toronto) has published a delightful 24-page brochure in full color entitled "Art Galleries and Museums in London."

From the colorful front cover showing two rather Bohemian-looking London youngsters at the National Gallery, to the magnificent color reproductions in later pages, the brochure serves as an almost irresistible appetizer for the great collections of London. Rather than a guide or even a complete list, it inspires to be nothing more informative or descriptive than the gong-that is sounded when the meal is ready!

Five of the greatest London collections have been chosen for special prominence in the brochure but it also points out that there are many other less widely-known museums, appealing particularly to people of specialist interests. For instance, there are museums which are "homes away from home" for musicians, physicians, historians, furniture enthusiasts and antiquarians.

At the outbreak of war, the most important of London's museums and art galleries sent their contents to lonely places in the country where they would be safe which was just as well, as several of their London homes suffered severe damage. It is no exaggeration to say that today these museums and galleries are among the most beautifully arranged in the world; that their treasures not to be computed in anything but celestial reckoning; that they have become alive, daily distributing that inward delight that makes life fuller and richer; and that thousands upon thousands find them refreshment and calm.

All these pleasures, surprises and discoveries may be had for nothing, for very few of London's museums or art galleries make any charge for admission. Indeed, they go further; they insist that the man who temporarily takes charge of cameras, walking sticks and parcels shall not be tipped when he returns them!

"Art Galleries and Museums in London" may be obtained free of charge by writing to the British Travel Association, 90 Adelaide St. West, Toronto, Ont. This is indeed a brochure which is an asset to one's library.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Roan Was True Worker & Good, Too, On The Road!

"The threshing's not much like it used to be," James commented to a visiting farmer this evening. "Folks don't seem to be evening the same regard for it these times. Now it's more and less, only a chore of season to get done with. Why, I can remember when it was the event of the harvest."

The visitor nodded. "I reckon if we had seen the threshing progress from the fall to the first machine as the older folks did, we would take more stock of it. I mind my father saying that he considered that to be one of the most remarkable changes of his entire life, even though the early threshers were pretty crude machines. It seems they didn't separate the grain from the chaff. It had to be winnowed afterwards."

"Did you ever see any threshing with a treadmill?" James queried, eyes alight with young remembrances.

"Yes, but not to remember it too clearly."

"It was something of an event in my early boyhood to have the gear (improved some by then) come to do our fall threshing. The wheat—how anxious I was to see if the wheat-bin would fill and to have some besides, say a grist or two over, that left us with quite a satisfied feeling," James said.

"Those were the days" we chuckled.

"Yes," he continued, "I can hear yet the clatter of the threshing gear coming up the lane—the treadmill hauled on an old-time truck, by a pair of horses, one 'tracing' the other."

The neighbor who threshed for us (and one year at ninety-nine other barns) had a horse as knowing as a man. He'd take his place day in and day out on the mill, with another horse, without being tied.

Near mealtime" James smiled at the memory "he would ease back against the railing, or sometimes lift the belt off the fly-wheel with his nose to bring theresher to a halt."

He was a roan, of about twelve hundred pounds—a true worker, and good too on the road. One morning the neighbor drove with him to town, planning to be back in time for an afternoon of threshing. It was just twelve noon when he left for home and at once, that horse was in place on the mill over at Mr. A's barns opposite. Nice going, wasn't it? And a big day's work for both man and animal," James nodded.

"And the treadmill was replaced by the upright gasoline engine," we remembered.

"That will spell the ruination of farmers' the old-timers said," the visitor chuckled. "Look at the price of it—and the fuel it will take to run it and besides it will burn down the barns."

"And the tractor put them in the discard" James offered, "like I reckon the combines are going to put the threshers. Yes, I guess even the best of them will go the way of the flail. I was telling the boys that today up at the other farm. We set up the gear this afternoon and did a bit of threshing there."

"And you should see the grain!" Mack said coming by then. "It's plump and clean, and pretty as a picture."

The afternoon was too-quiet and pretty, with a September loveliness holding the countryside enthralled.

Until tomorrow—Dairy --- Good-night.
