

Says Fishermen Can Learn Much From Scandinavians

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — Pat Antle, treasurer of the Newfoundland Federation of Fishermen, says fishermen in this province can learn a lot about economics and marketing from Scandinavian countries.

Recently returned from a tour of Denmark, Norway and Great Britain, Mr. Antle says Scandinavian fishermen have a standard of living "way above" their Newfoundland counterparts but catch far less fish per man.

They do so well, he says, because they utilize all their by-products are trained to do their jobs and are "100 per cent" organized.

VOLUNTEER MEMBERS

Norway has a large fishermen's union, resembling the Newfoundland Federation of Fishermen. Made up of volunteer members, it promotes the vocational and economic interests of fishermen. It is also the parent body of co-operative unions and sales organizations which handle fish sales.

"All by-products are utilized, processed and marketed," says Mr. Antle. "Denmark, for instance is selling cod tongues as far away as California and can never get enough to supply market demands."

Fish hearts, cheeks and other edible parts find their way to the consumer's table. "Even the guts are used for chemical purposes," he says.

"In Norway alone they have five state fishing schools, one district school and one school for teaching the process of handling fish. Courses are also offered in navigation, radio-telephone, bookkeeping and care of electrical equipment aboard the vessels," he says.

GOOD PRICES ASSURED

"In 10 months any young Norwegian fisherman can be trained to be a first class skipper. In five months he can learn diesel engineering."

Prices are set in advance of the season, Mr. Antle says, because fishermen refuse to work if they are not assured in the early spring their catch will bring a reasonable price at the season's end.

"The advance prices are taken care of by a fund set up especially to deal with this matter. If the over-all market returns in any one year are lower than the minimum price... losses are made up directly from the fund."

If market prices are higher than the agreed price, the remainder

TIMELY NOTES ON FUR TOPICS

Congratulations to Lovell W. Hancock, Summerside, who was elected president of the Canadian National Silver Fox Breeders' Association at their annual meeting held in Saint John recently. Lovell has been one of the most active members of this organization for many years and has steadfastly maintained his faith in silver foxes and their mutations by breeding high class specimens year after year.

The principal part of his fur energies are centered on mink and the way he has progressed in breeding and exhibiting fine specimens of different varieties shows that he is naturally a scientific turn of mind. Early in his career he received a very liberal education in one of the best colleges in Ohio and that has helped greatly in understanding genetics without which knowledge it would be impossible to arrive at the goal he has achieved. We can look forward to Lovell putting a good deal of energy into this revered fox organization.

A collection of approximately 5,100 dressed chinchilla pelts were auctioned by New York Auction Co., Inc. yesterday. The goods went on show Tuesday and were described as a "fine, select collection." cent of the 22,836 mutation mink from independent shippers which were offered at their auction last week. Prices were quoted as very firm on all types except silver-which advanced slightly. An offering of wild mink was mainly withdrawn. According to the auction company's report there was some bidding interest shown in the collection, but shippers' limits were above the current market levels. Comments from those who attended were that the price levels were very strong. However, it was stated that the best pelts have been pretty well sold and that the goods now offered were mainly commercial types, but demand for these has apparently picked up recently.

LENINGRAD

And here's a word that you are invited to translate — we can't: "VO. SOJUZPUSHNINA" cordially invites buyers to attend the 27th international Leningrad Fur Auction, July 23, 1956. It is apparently the trade name for what the Leningrad fur auction is known to its clients. At that auction almost every type of fur is included in the consignment with the exception of silver fox. Apparently the Russians are going to take up the breeding of silver fox as they have purchased quite a number of breeding foxes from Sweden sources.

There should be a market in Germany, Czechoslovakia and other countries adjoining for that type of fur. It was quite popular there until World War 2 came and then of course no supplies reached Europe but the prestige of the fur must still linger in many people's minds for it was to Russia that the best specimens of silver fox from the Charles Dalton ranch went. A consignment of 100 skins averaged over $1,300 and one of the pelts brought $250 sterling, which was equal to over $2,500 net. The Russian noblemen and Austrian noblemen used these skins as lining for their coats.

An appeal by the Universal Fur Breeders and Dyers Ltd., of Toronto, Ont., in the Supreme Court asking that mouton be declared not a fur was upheld. The court Government revenue department tax on mouton. While the Supreme Court's decision will be a relief to the fur industry, it is unfortunate that the Federal Government collected in the past on the mouton tax.

Furthermore the 15 per cent tax on dressing and dyeing mouton is not now in effect. There are two reasons for this. First, mouton has been featured as having the qualities of fur. Now, however, that the ruling is that mouton is not a fur it places such coats in the category of cloth manufacturers and therefore they may not be classified or advertised as fur coats. This decision will be very pleasing to furriers.

BE FOXY

And here's an advertisement in Women's Wear Daily by Esraq and Pappas, 226 West 29th Street, New York — If you want to be foxy, see a good foxman. Russian and Canadian blues and pastels, Norwegian whites, natural silvers in stoles, capes, shrugs, muffs and collars.

There is an informative article on the feeding of fish in a recent Black Fox and Modern Mink Breeders. These are the points stressed... Don't feed one variety of fish in any greater quantity than 15 per cent your ration. 2. Exercise the greatest amount of care in buying only from the best sources. The difference between a good product and a poor product may only represent a quarter of a cent a pound, but that small amount helps the good producer to stay interested in the business, and making the best product, which is the only way he knows how. 3. When feeding a high fish diet use meat sources that are heavier in fat or even supplement with additional fats such as lard. Carefully consider the varieties of fish that you will use. There are many combinations.

A good example would be as follows: Use 15 per cent whiting — this provides you viscera and a high percentage of flesh. 2. Use 15 per cent haddock and cod — these varieties are generally caught together and always processed together. Usually haddock is 75 per cent and cod is 25 per cent and sometimes even less of cod. They cannot be picked out from each other in the processing — they are not done in human consumption and the trimming goes along in the same manner. However, they are a very similar variety known as white fish and do a good job together. Then for the third variety you can use either flounder or pollock at 15 per cent. These two fish as described above have viscera, but not the putrefying type. Some seasons of the year good roe fish is available, it can also be utilized as one of your varieties of viscera type fish.

Fish feeding on the east coast by ranchers in the 45 per cent bracket is very common. Some even go much higher than that and did not experience the problems of some midwest ranchers this year... Outside of feed
