When we at last were comparatively in safety, I found myself, for the first time since I left Orleans, warm and comfortable... I had never seen enough of this kind of thing to know that my feet were on the verge of mortification...

There was scarcely time to amputate, had I been able to do so, and had I been able to procure life at such a price. Only one thing I could do and I resolved to try it. I ordered my men to cut off my feet... I was nearly dead when I awoke, and I found myself, for the first time since I left Orleans, warm and comfortable...

When George IV. once proclaimed that he had had his Royal Rochester. What a terrible fire, a poor wretch, who had found it! said his Rochester companion.

HAZARD'S GAZETTE

Wednesday, November 15, 1854.

A friend of ours asked us the other day, why it was that the congregation of the Church of England in Charlotteville continued to be so numerous...
