New Chief Of Norad Plans Look At Troops

By HAROLD MORRISON

WASHINGTON (CP) — The new chief of the North American Air Defence system is a tall, slender, battle hardened pilot who believes the first thing a commander ought to do is have a close look at the troops.

So just as soon as he takes over command from Gen. Laurence S. Kuter July 31, Lt.-Gen. John Koehler Gerhart will fly into the Canadian north to make an on - the - spot inspection of the radar lines on the frontier of Canada - U.S. defences, look over the various interceptor squadrons and Bomarc stations and decide what priority he should give to any improvements needed.

But even before he formally takes over Norad command, the 54-year-old general has some clear-cut ideas of urgent needs. They fall into line with views held by Kuter that perhaps of greatest urgency is development of an effective defence against long - range nuclear missiles.

Gerhart, who until his new appointment was the U.S. air Force deputy chief of staff for plans and programs, also places great stress on finding ways of fighting off a potential enemy attack in outer space.

SPACE DEFENCE

"We're just on the threshold, just in the infancy of our military effort in space but space is part of Norad defence and we've got to be able to operate there," Gerhart said in an interview.

"Nothing the Russians have done or said reduces the essential need of space defence."

As for the general trend in East - West relations, Gerhart believes the cold war "hasn't changed much in the last few years." The U.S., he says, has tried strenuously to get dismissed any thing in the Soviet attitude to warrant optimism."

Generally, Gerhart tries to avoid political discussions. As the man who will have operational control over all the Canadian and American air defences, the amiable, soft - spoken six-footer is mainly interested in the efficiency of his team.

And he wants to get along with the Canadians.

"I know Canadians; I like them and I am looking forward to the utmost co-operation from them," he said as he leaned back behind a Pentagon desk, his slender, 155-pound frame encased in a uniform that earned five rows of ribbons, including honors won flying bomber missions over Germany.

LIKES OUTDOORS

Married but childless, Gerhart is an outdoorsman, fond of trout and salmon fishing, skiing and golf. On one office wall is an enlarged photograph of the general curving down a ski slope. At home the Gerharts have two French poodles: one black, the other white.

"Yes, I believe nuclear warheads should definitely be considered part of the North American defence arsenal," he said. "But I wouldn't want to rely solely on nuclear weapons. Defence has to be flexible and not inhibited."

Gerhart, a native of Saginaw, Mich., with 34 years of air force experience, declined to expand on his nuclear views because the issue is a matter of controversy both in Canada and the U.S.

In the same way, he cautiously avoided expressing views on what the proportions should be between missiles and manned aircraft in North American defence. He observed, however, that there is "considerable divergency" of opinion on that issue right in the U.S. defence department.

PROBLEMS CUT OUT

He believes that despite the warning by Soviet Premier Khrushchev that Russia now had a global rocket, the northern Arctic wastelands could still be the air road of a major attack. Of considerable concern, however, is the increasing possibility that Russia could launch a surprise nuclear attack from nuclear submarines off the North American coasts.

So Gerhart has his problems cut out for him. He feels that though Canadian and American defences have moved out of the subsonic and into the supersonic era there is a need for extending the jet interceptor range—"to engage the enemy as far out as possible."

Aircraft forms a deep part of Gerhart's life. He flight-tested bombers and fighters before the Second World War. He was one of America's first glider test pilots and commanded a combat bomb wing of Flying Fortresses over Germany in 1943.

In 1951 he was chief of staff of Project Greenhouse which conducted thermonuclear tests over the Pacific.

"We fired the first U.S. thermonuclear device," said Gerhart. "It wasn't a complete bomb but these tests proved the feasibility of thermonuclear weapons."

The bidding:

Opening lead—four of hearts.

Hard luck stories are a dime a dozen in bridge, but every time someone cries on your shoulder about his bad luck, it means someone else has had good luck, so maybe it all comes out even in the end.

This hand occurred in a match between England and the United States in 1956. The American team had bad luck in the deal, which means in turn that the British team had good luck, but, at that, the English had to capitalize on the opportunity they were given.

The British East opened the bidding with a club, over which South said a spade and West two diamonds. Considering the values North had and the three bids that had already been made before he got a chance to speak, North must have thought he was playing with a pinochle deck.

However, having more faith in partner than the opponents, North first cuebid diamonds and then contracted for a slam. East thereupon doubled.

The British West read the situation correctly. He interpreted the double of the slam as lead-directing and calling for an unusual lead.

The only unusual lead possible on the bidding was a heart. West's normal lead without a double would be either a club, the suit his partner had bid, or a diamond, the suit he himself had bid.

Since East had barred the lead of either of these suits by doubling, West led a heart, paying blind obeisance to East's command. As a result, the contract was defeated. East ruffed, cashed the ace of clubs, and that was the end of that.

If West had made the highly tempting lead of a singleton club, the American declarer would have made the slam. West gave a shining example of confidence in his partner's bid.

The American team was certainly unlucky to go down in the excellent slam contract. But they were doubly unlucky when, at the other table, the British North-South pair conservatively stopped at only a game contract, which they made.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X B

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
