Pearsons U.S. Speech Rewords Canadian Role

By JAMES NELSON

OTTAWA (CP)—The bridge in the Anglo-American community . . . the linchpin in the Western alliance . . . the link across national borders . . . one of the points in the ABC triangle.

These are phrases often used to describe the role of Canada in international affairs, which Prime Minister Pearson characterized during the weekend as putting Canadian-American differences to work.

Informants say Mr. Pearson's speech Sunday at Notre Dame University amounted to rewording of the Canadian role which has proved effective in the past. The government has no specific new proposal in mind.

Mr. Pearson's speech to the university commencement spoke of the Canadian-American differences not simply as disputes between the two countries, but as the distinctions between them which make it possible for their policies to be complementary.

HELP EACH OTHER

"By making differences work for us," he said. "I mean that we can complement each other's policy and ideas.

"I mean that, on the foundation of our own close relationship, our own close partnership, there are some ways of importance in which Canada can assist in the broader relationship of both our countries with other countries . . ."

He spoke of the Commonwealth, the North Atlantic alliance, and relations between North America and the new, developing nations of other continents.

This is an extension of the old American-British-Canadian triangle which one official says now has become a triangle with many points.

The idea is that Canada can be an interpreter of British attitudes and actions to the United States, and in the other direction.

Mr. Pearson said Sunday that Canada, with its smaller power status and its North American environment, can play a useful role for the U.S. in interpreting to Washington the probable attitude of other countries to U.S. international moves.

On direct relations between Canada and the U. S., Mr. Pearson told his American audience: If you can't get along with us, who can you get along with Authorities here saw a reflection of this question in President Kennedy's speech to American University in Washington Monday in which he said the U.S. is trying to adjust "small but significant" differences with Canada and Mexico to set an example to other nations.

OLD HEADLINES ARE RECOUNTED

LEWISTOWN, Mont. (AP) Publisher Woody Laughnan of the Lewistown Daily News in going through files of the frontier days Lewiston Argus found this headline on a story about the opening of a trial:

"Dirty horse thief caught red handed with the goods.

"Will probably be strung up and good riddance.

"Stole horse from defenceless widow."

A jury acquitted the man the next day and the headline read:

"Highly respected citizen wrongly accused of theft

"Stupid charge embarrasses man.

"Widow was out to get him on false charges."

Quebec Woman Stresses Threat To Confederation

WINNIPEG (CP) — Miss Jeanne Du Val of Quebec City predicted here that if something isn't done soon to ease the tensions between French- and English-speaking Canada, Confederation will be destroyed.

Speaking in French to the annual meeting of the Voice of Women, Miss Du Val said:

"I am completely convinced if the situation continues another four years there will be no such thing as Canada as we know it today."

She said there are those who can read English papers "and know you are not unfriendly, but the French-Canadian who does not read English does not know it.

"Please be conscious of the danger in Quebec.

Miss Du Val, whose French was translated by Mrs. Soulange Chaput-Rolland of Montreal, spoke in favor of a resolution later passed, calling for a cultural and news exchange among members to further French-English co-operation.

The delegation of eight members from Quebec received unanimous support for a resolution placing Mrs. Therese Casgrain of Montreal, immediate past-president of the group, in a board position. She was also asked to act as Quebec representative on all occasions judged appropriate by the board.

Opening lead—five of spades.

The declarer starts with a great advantage over the defenders because he can see, as soon as dummy comes down, the exact strength or weakness of his cause. The defenders have no such advantage, since all either can see is a portion of the declarer's resources and a portion of their own.

As a consequence, the declarer sometimes achieves by deception a victory he is not entitled to on the strict merits of the cards. Here is such a case.

South was in three notrumph and West led a spade, East playing the jack and South the ace!

Of course, South could have won the trick with the queen instead of the ace, but he realized that the contract was in some danger and that there was a chance of escaping defeat by winning the first trick with the ace.

At trick two he played a club to the king and led the queen of diamonds and finessed. West won with the king and, having noted earlier that the jack of spades had forced the ace, returned a low spade to his partner's (assumed) queen.

South's deceptive play now became exposed when he won the trick in dummy with the nine and cashed two more clubs and four diamonds to fulfill the contract.

Whether or not West should have fallen into a trap is a moot point, but there can be no doubt about the correctness of South's opening play. Declarer knew that if he took the first trick with the queen and later lost a diamond finesse that West would very likely shift his attack to hearts and thus defeat him.

He hoped, by winning with the ace, to persuade West that East had the queen of spades, and thus induce a spade continuation if it turned out that West had the king of diamonds.

He was not particularly concerned with the spade trick he might cost himself if later events proved that East had the king of diamonds, since in that case he would be practically sure to make at least nine tricks.

Cardinal Cushing Advocates Easing Marriage Restrictions

NEW YORK (AP)—Richard Cardinal Cushing, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Boston, advocates removing many of the church's restrictions on marriages between Catholics and non - Catholics. He specifically suggests eliminating the religious promises required of the non-Catholic partner.

Cardinal Cushing, whose 2,700,000-member archdiocese is the second largest in the United States, says the promises are "an irritant to many, and some, it is clear from what happens subsequently, make the promises in bad faith."

The cardinal made his views known in the current issue of America, a Jesuit weekly magazine.

It is one of the strongest positions taken by an American member of the college of cardinals for Catholic marriage law revisions.

URGE CHANGES

Both the Archbishop of Canterbury, Most Rev. Arthur Michael Ramsey of the Church of England, and Rev. Willem A. Visser't Hooft, chief executive of the World Council of Churches, have urged changes during the last two years.

Last month the Presbyterian Church of Scotland officially objected to Catholic rules on mixed marriages, saying they were a cause of broken homes and a stumbling block to Christian unity.

The marriage promises to which Cardinal Cushing referred include pledges by the non-Catholic partner to:

1. Baptize and educate all children of the marriage as Catholics.

2. Not interfere with the Catholic partner's religion.

A further requirement for a dispensation for the marriage is the moral certainty that the promises will be fulfilled.

Cardinal Cushing, now in Rome to help select a new pope, predicted that the church's canon laws on marriage would be changed as an outgrowth of the ecumenical council.

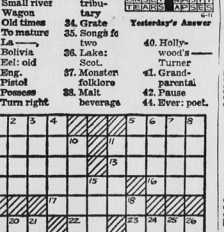
Yesterday's Answer



DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
