TWENTY YEARS STANDING.

Trouble of a Norwich Farmer who was Relieved by Dood's Kidney Pills.

NORWICH, Sept. 13.—For twenty years Mr. Wilbert Woodward, of Willow Dell, has suffered with backache. He grew so bad that he was confined to his bed two days out of a week. His farm suffered for the lack of the eye of its master, and Mr. Woodward made every effort to find a cure for his trouble.

He says "I tried everything I ever heard of, but no cure. Last fall I heard about Dood's Kidney Pills, and I bought three boxes of them from Mr. Baillon of Norwich, and I am happy to say they have done me more good than all the other medicines put together that I got from the doctor. My wife takes Dood's Kidney Pills also, for lame back and rheumatism and finds them grand. I am suffering as we did will try these remedies. I would willingly pay two dollars a box rather than be without Dood's Kidney Pills in the house."

Many a straightforward man is occasionally seen on pleasure bent.

SUCCESS IN BUSINESS.

In the course of conversation, a few days ago, the question was put to the writer: "How do you account for the fact that in so many cases in the present day young men who have succeeded their fathers as manufacturers or merchants have run the business into the ground in the course of a few months or years. Are they not as competent as their fathers? Is this race degenerating? Or what is the reason that the new generation are not as successful business men as the old?"

Before we reply to our pessimistic friend, we would remark that his generalization is too sweeping; for it would be easy to point out instances in which the sons or successors of old firms have in the present generation shown marked improvement upon the business management of their fathers or predecessors, and have lifted old and moribund businesses out of a rut and made them successful to a degree not known before. Nevertheless, it is not to be denied that in very many cases both of retail and wholesale concerns or factories, the administration has not only not improved with the new blood put into it, but has either collapsed or continued in a dead-and-alive condition.

Now to account for this is what we are asked. We reply that, for one thing, numbers of business men do not recognize the changed conditions of business in late years; or if they did, they delayed or refused to conform to them. The accustomed currents of trade, its methods, its terms even, have undergone changes by reason of modern invention and development, and also, it must not be forgotten, by reason of the pressure of competition and the whims of fashion. The ocean cable, the telephone, the stenographer, typewriter, the phonograph, all play their part in modern business. And the men or firms who choose to ignore these helps, and attempt to get along without them, are likely to fall behind in the race.

One does not need to go far, however, to find examples of concerns whose business had been built up to prominence by long years of patient toil and economy, but which, when deprived of the experienced heads and hands which has so built them up, declined and fell. This, too, in spite of the employment by their newer managers of such modern facilities as we have described. We must look, then, for other causes of their non-success. It is undeniable that in many cases the old-fashioned commercial virtues of economy, promptness, assiduity, regard for truth, have not been exemplified by the newer generation of merchants as they were by the old. They have too often been replaced by extravagance, leisurely ease, cunning and smartness. The younger men have not been content to work and play and save, as their fathers worked and saved. To take life easy and to have a good time has often been their aim. Only rarely do we find the man or men content to profit by the experience of those who went before them. There is something in the rush and whirl of modern life which seems to unfit men for steady, plodding application and to encourage rashness and the speculative spirit.

Mercantile life is not an easy existence to-day any more than it was twenty or fifty years ago, and we do not need to conclude that younger merchants, who are "heirs of all the ages," are lots cleverer than their fathers, because not always succeeding as they did. Rather does it seem that they do not give their whole-souled attention to their business, cultivate the same saving habits, display the same regard for the quality of their output or the character of their establishment. Mere cleverness and dashing enterprise are very imperfect substitutes for plodding care of details and a high-toned regard for morality and precision in the conduct of mercantile affairs.

GEN. BOTHA LAYS PLANS.

HIS SCHEME TO FIGHT FOR THREE MONTHS AND THEN ESCAPE

General Botha's dogged retreat through the Lydenburg hills has Portuguese East Africa as its goal. The Dutch commander expects to fight the pursuing British troops for at least another three months, and then take his force, men and guns, over the Portuguese frontier. Once across the border he will allow himself to be disarmed by the neutral power, having vindicated his oath not to be captured by the soldiers of the queen. Even then Botha does not intend to offer any spoils of war to the enemy. His army will be but a barren capture. The gunners of every piece of artillery in his command, which includes the vast bulk of the Boer field armament, announce that they will reserve the last round of their powder for the purpose of blowing up their guns.

These statements are made on the authority of burghers who have been in the closest touch with the young republican general throughout the recent operations in the northeastern part of the Transvaal. They are as definitely confirmatory of the general's intention on his part the reception of the Portuguese Government's action spatching a thousand troops in devicinity of the South African troops to the

JOUBERT COUSIN OF QUEEN.

The late keeper of the archives at Haarlem has been discussing the question of the antecedents of the Boer General Joubert, and, among other remarks (says an Express correspondent), makes the following curious statement:—"Through the marriage of one of Joubert's forefathers, a Joubert, with a certain Desmier, Piet Joubert, the General, was really entitled to call Queen Victoria 'cousin.'" Strange as it may appear to some, the maker of this statement is quite prepared to demonstrate the truth of what he says by documentary evidence. He gives the genealogy of the Joubert family, stating that it comes from Poitou (France), and that the Boer general is a descendant in a direct line from the Knight Joubert, Grand Master of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem in 1169 and that a great-great-grandson of the said knight was killed by the English in 1356, in the battle of Poitiers.

Eczema on the Scalp

Would Itch and Burn until the Child Screamed with Agony—A Wonderful Cure Effected by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

The case recorded here is one of the worst ever brought to the attention of Toronto's best physicians, and when doctors gave up all hope of recovery, Dr. Chase's Ointment was successful in producing a perfect cure.

Mr. James Scott, 136 Wright avenue Toronto, states:—"My boy, Tom, aged ten, was for nearly three years afflicted with a bad form of Eczema of the scalp, which was very unsightly and resisted all kinds of remedies and doctor's treatment. His head and face were in a terrible state. We had to keep him in a school, and at times his head would bleed, and the child would scream with agony. For two and a half years we battled with it in vain. Half a year ago we found a cure in Dr. Chase's Ointment. About five boxes of Chase's Ointment, original sores dried up, leaving the skin a pleasure to touch. To say it is the merit of Dr. Chase's Ointment is putting it very mildly."
