THE PIRATE.

By Sir Walter Scott.

CHAPTER XXIX.

The domestics of Magnus, already sufficiently alarmed at the violence of Norna's conduct, scarce waited the imperious command of their master to evacuate her dwelling with all despatch; and the Udaller, with a daughter on each arm, was in the act of following them, when Norna said emphatically, "Stop!" They obeyed, and again turned towards her. She held out her hand to Magnus, which the placable Udaller instantly folded in his own ample palm.

"Magnus," she said, "we part by necessity, but I trust, not in anger?"

"Surely not, cousin," said the warm-hearted Udaller, well nigh stammering in his hasty disclamation of all unkindness,—"most assuredly not. I never bear ill-will to any one, much less to one of my own blood, and who has piloted me with her advice through many a rough tide, as I would pilot a boat betwixt Swona and Stroma, through all the waws, wells, and swelchies of the Pentland Firth."

"Enough," said Norna, "and now farewell, with such a blessing as I dare bestow—not a word more! Maidens," she added, "draw near, and let me kiss your brows."

The sibyl was obeyed by Minna with awe, and by Brenda with fear; the one overmastered by the warmth of her imagination, the other by the natural timidity of her constitution. Norna then dismissed them, and in two minutes afterwards they found themselves beyond the bridge and standing upon the rocky platform in front of the ancient Pictish Burgh, which it was the pleasure of this sequestered female to inhabit. The night, for it was now fallen, was unusually serene. A bright twilight, which glimmered far over the surface of the sea, supplied the brief absence of the summer's sun; and the waves seemed to sleep under its influence, so faint and slumberous was the sound with which one after another rolled on and burst against the foot of the cliff on which they stood. In front of them stood the rugged fortress, seeming, in the uniform grayness of the atmosphere, as aged, as shapeless, and as massive, as the rock on which it was foutded. There was neither sight nor sound that indicated human habitation, save that from one rude shot-hole glimmered the flame of the feeble lamp by which the sibyl was probably pursuing her mystical and nocturnal studies, shooting upon the twilight, in which it was soon lost and confounded, a single line of tiny light; bearing the same proportion to that of the atmosphere, as the aged woman and her serf, the sole inhabitants of that desert, did to the solitude with which they were surrounded.

For several minutes, the party, thus suddenly and unexpectedly expelled from the shelter where they had reckoned upon spending the night, stood in silence, each wrapt in their own separate reflections. Minna, her thoughts fixed on the mystical consolation which she had received, in vain endeavored to extract from the words of Norna a more distinct and intelligible meaning; and the Udaller had not yet recovered his surprise at the extrusion to which he had been thus whimsically subjected, under circumstances that prohibited him from resenting as an insult, treatment, which, in all other respects, was so shocking to the genial hospitality of his nature, that he still felt like one disposed to be angry, if he but knew how to set about it. Brenda was the first who brought matters to a point, by asking whither they were to go, and how they were to spend the night? The question, which was asked in a tone, that, amidst its simplicity, had something dolorous in it, entirely changed the train of her father's ideas; and the unexpected perplexity of their situation now striking him in a comic point of view, he laughed till his very eyes ran over, while every rock around him rung, and the sleeping sea-fowl were startled from their repose, by the loud, hearty explosions of his obstreperous hilarity.

The Udaller's daughters, eagerly representing to their father the risk of displeasing Norna by this unlimited indulgence of his mirth, united their efforts to drag him to a farther distance from her dwelling. Magnus, yielding to their strength, which, feeble as it was, his own fit of laughter rendered him incapable of resisting, suffered himself to be pulled to a considerable distance from the Burgh, and then escaped from their hands, and sitting down, or rather suffering himself to drop, upon a large stone which lay conveniently by the wayside, he again laughed so long and lustily, that his vexed and anxious daughters became afraid that there was something more than natural in these repeated convulsions.

At length his mirth exhausted both itself and the Udaller's strength. He groaned heavily, wiped his eyes, and said, not without feeling some desire to renew his obstreperous cachinnations, "Now, by the bones of Saint Magnus, my ancestor and namesake, one would imagine that being turned out of doors, at this time of night, was nothing short of an absolutely exquisite jest; for I have shaken my sides at it till they ached. There we sat, made snug for the night, and I made as sure of a good supper and a can as ever I had been of either,—and here we are all taken aback; and then poor Brenda's doleful voice and melancholy question of 'What is to be done, and where are we to sleep?' In good faith, unless one of those knaves, who must needs torment the poor woman by their trencher-work before it was wanted, can make amends by telling us of some snug port under our lee, we have no other course for it but to steer through the twilight on the bearing of Burgh-Westra, and rough it out as well as we can by the way. I am sorry but for you, girls; for many a cruise have I been upon when we were on shorter allowance than we are like to have now. I would I had but secured a morsel for you, and a drop for myself; and then there had been but little to complain of."

Both sisters hastened to assure the Udaller that they felt not the least occasion for food.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

What a "Magdalener" Thinks About It.

To the People of P. E. Island:

FELLOW CANADIANS,—If your local newspapers fairly represent public opinion in P. E. Island, there must be considerable dissatisfaction among you at the present time owing to the irregularity of your mails. It must certainly be pleasant to have daily mails between your Island and the mainland. You used to be satisfied with semi-weekly mails carried across the Straits in a 5-knot sailing craft. You had no railway then, nor special train to carry the mails. I am glad to find that though you are in the habit of grumbling a great deal at all seasons of the year, you are an ambitious kind of people, and want all the conveniences enjoyed by those who live upon the continent. You complain if your mails, for instance, are not brought over to your little Island every day in winter as well as in summer; and if a special train is not in waiting at the Capes or Georgetown, as the case may be, to carry them swiftly forward to the great business centre, Charlottetown, complaints increase on all sides, especially among business men and commercial drummers. I imagine that if a special were put on now between the Capes and Charlottetown, other parts of the Island, such as Summerside, Tignish, Georgetown and Souris would be looking for a special too, to carry their mails. And why not? Surely all these places are as much entitled to a mail special as is the capital city.

But while you are so exacting in your demands for daily crossings to your Island, and a special to meet the mails on their arrival at your board ice, do you ever think about us poor people who live on the Magdalen Islands, who only get a mail from the outside world once a week by the old steamer Beaver, during the summer season, and none at all during the winter. The Magdalen Islands, as many of you know, are not so very far away. They are situated almost in the very centre of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Their most southern point is only about fifty miles from the East Point of your Island, and about sixty from Cape North in Cape Breton. The French population of these Islands alone nuinbers over 4000. We have four commodious Catholic Churches, with as many Catholic clergymen, and one Protestant clergyman with a hundred or so followers. We have convent schools, which are well patronized by our people. Altogether, we are as peaceable and as God-fearing a class of people as are to be found within the broad Dominion. We pay our share towards the various branches of the public service, and still we have only, as I have already said, one mail a week in summer and none at all in winter. If we were only half as highly favored as you are, how happy would we be. But, it may be asked, is there no remedy for our utter isolation during the greater part of the year? I answer, I believe there is. If the distance between Capes Tormentine and Traverse can be safely travelled in winter in four or five hours, I hold that the distance that lies between the Magdalen Islands and East Point can, with proper outfit and necessary appliances, be also safely travelled over in winter. If the Dominion Government will only grant the means, I am prepared to furnish the names of parties who will undertake the contract of carrying the mails weekly between East Point and Magdalen Islands. Some may think my proposel an impracticable one, but if the scheme to build a Subway across the Northumberland Straits is considered practicable by competent engineers, the proposition to supply us Magdalen Islanders with mail accommodation via P. E. Island in winter, should certainly be favorably entertained. To Dr. Fortin's energy and skill, we owe our invaluable telegraph arrangements, and to him we now look in his present high position in the Senate of Canada, to aid us in obtaining proper mail accommodation winter and summer, with other parts of the world. And it is hoped that your Island representatives at Ottawa, knowing as they do the inconvenience and hardships of being isolated for the dreariest part of the year, will give their assistance too, in order that we may be placed on the same footing, in mail matters, as other parts of the Dominion.

Yours,
Jan. 23. 1888. MAGDALENER.

Odds and Ends.

There are forty-three stallions listed who trotted in 2.30 or better.

A Texas jury in a murder trial reached a verdict by drawing straws.

Here two timely rules for the new year:
1. Settle up.
2. Settle down.

Mrs. Crobar is a powerful lever in a Saginaw, Mich., church society, where the Rev. Mr. Broadax hews a branch from the tree of evil every Sunday.

A citizen of Freemont, Neb., who got drunk and froze his feet so that they had to be amputated, has just recoved $2.000 damages from the man who sold him the liquor.

More than a million dollars of money belonging to people whose whereabouts are unknown lies in the savings banks of this State. What stories some of these dollars could tell if they could be given speech.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain; and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle.
