

If Reception Cool Yank Investment May Slow Down

QUEBEC (CP) — American money for Canadian expansion may not be so easy to come by in the years immediately ahead unless it continues to receive a cordial welcome in Canada, Cyrus Eaton, Canadian-born American industrialist, said Tuesday night.

Addressing the annual dinner of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, Mr. Eaton said American industry has its own ambitious plans for expansion at costs running into billions of dollars within the next five years.

In the tremendous competition for capital, he added, Canada would find it in her own interest to maintain a friendly attitude toward would-be American investors.

"However much American money poured into Canadian enterprises, the United States had neither the desire nor the power to reduce Canada to the status of a small and dependent crown colony 'that she unhappily occupied at the turn of the century.'"

Mr. Eaton's remarks were contained in a text released to the press in advance of delivery.

FIERY CHALLENGE

Canada's vast unoccupied territory to the north constituted both the fiercest challenge and the brightest promise that had ever fallen to one nation's lot in recorded history, Mr. Eaton declared.

Leaders of the northward trek must not only be men of courage and vision but must also command a broad knowledge of the miracles of modern science.

For Canadians who loved to work and who took supreme satisfaction in meeting and overcoming formidable obstacles the Canadian north offered the richest rewards, spiritual and material. It was no playground for easy-going and fun-loving folk who found their greatest happiness "in the sultry pleasures of southern climes," but neither was it a barren and inaccessible wasteland.

One serious limitation to Canada's progress, however, lay in finding funds. Money simply was not available in adequate amounts from Canadian private and public sources to meet the great demands of mines, factories, oil wells, roads, railroads, airports, harbors, telephone lines and water power.

Canadian investors should, of course, be encouraged to put their funds into Canadian enterprises.

Canadian wage earners should be educated to the advantage of stock ownership and federal and provincial government should also do their share. But outside capital would still be urgently needed.

Mr. Eaton is chairman of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway. In Canada he is chairman of Steep Rock Iron Mines Ltd. and is active in iron-ore projects in Quebec's Ungava. He has established a "thinker's paradise" at his birthplace, Pugwash, N.S., to which authors, scholars, statesmen, labor leaders and business men are invited each summer. He also owns and operates the 3,000-acre Deep Cove farms in Nova Scotia.
