Nickel alloyed steel is used for pressure vessels in chemical processes operated at extreme low temperatures.

Not only is production moving along at a high rate, Steel said, "but demand for steel at the mill level is firming up a little after easing during the summer. The magazine said the auto industry—its biggest steel consumer—is stepping up its output after a summer lull, and the sales of one producer of household refrigerators are running 82 per cent ahead of last year.

But the steel men, however, are keeping a cautious eye on business. Producers of premium priced steel are actually feeling a pinch as the consumers turn to standard priced supplies. One premium mill, for example, is down to 20 per cent of capacity production, as compared with 100 per cent earlier in the year.

Steel production is on the up-grade again and October's output will nearly equal that of a year ago, Steel magazine said today.

The metalworking weekly said this month's production should total about 9,500,000 net tons, compared to 9,808,084 in the same month last year. Steelmaking edged up to 95.5 per cent of rated capacity last week after holding steady at 95 per cent for three weeks.

Last October the rate was 106.6 per cent of capacity, but Steel pointed out that the capacity on which this year's operating rates are computed is eight per cent higher.

Severe Drought Now Covers Much Of The United States

CHICAGO, (AP)—A blanket of drought now covers most of the United States.

It scalded many large cattle and crop areas earlier in the year. A long spell of warm, sunny weather has caused it to spread to other sections like wind-borne dust.

An Associated Press survey shows that lack of normal rainfall has affected most of the states from New York to California.

Wells Dry Up Wells have dried up, and new ones are being sunk in hope and haste.

Parched pastures and shrivelled vegetable crops have resulted in losses calculated in millions of dollars.

There have been scores of forest and grass fires—none, so far, of disastrous scope.

Many farmers are hauling water, and some towns have restricted its use to stretch out dwindling supplies.

The widespread dryness varies in degree.

Worst Drought Yet Missouri is experiencing the worst drought in its history. It is one of the worst ever suffered by the state.

The drought in the district around New York City is in the midst of its most severe fall drought since 1949.

The water supply at El Dorado, Kan., is so low that a dozen business houses are drilling their own wells.

Some farmers are hauling water for their stock in southern Iowa. Many cities in Iowa have barred outdoor fires.

Many towns in Nebraska are enforcing bans against burning leaves and trash outdoors.

Woods Explosive Camp fires have been prohibited in some parts of Colorado, and the hunting season has been postponed to Oct. 24.

Tennessee foresters warn that the woods are of almost "explosive dryness." Kentucky has ruled out picnicking and camping in state parks and suspending all hunting.

Montana has declared "a general emergency exists because of the unusual fire hazard."

California's governor has asked President Eisenhower to declare more than 1,000,000 acres of range land in San Bernardino county a drought emergency area.

The Federal Forestry Service reported 549,000 acres have been burned over by brush fires so far this year in Southern California's Angeles National Forest. This is the largest burned area there since 1924.

President Eisenhower and Secretary of Agriculture Benson attended a drought conference last week at Kansas City with 12 governors.

The governors and Benson agreed on an emergency program. Under it, the federal government will share the cost of shipping hay and feed for livestock in arid areas.

Tired Look There was a quick shifting by traders from stock to stock and from group to group. Many times this milling about gave the list a ragged appearance and contributed to what Wall Street traders like to call a tired look.

If this type of market continues for a while without any serious weakness developing, many traders feel that the time will be ripe for another try at a more vigorous advance.

Uranium Find In Central Wyoming

DENVER, (AP)—The Atomic Energy Commission confirmed Saturday what it says "looks like an important discovery" of uranium-bearing ores in remote lands of central Wyoming.

Charles C. Towle, chief of the Denver exploration branch of the AEC, said because of the isolated area "it is going to take considerable time to evaluate and determine the extent of the ore deposits."

The discovery—credited to Neil McNeic, a lone prospector—has started a rush of other prospectors to the area. The nearest railroad point is Bonneville, a station on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, about 25 miles northwest of the discovery.

Damage to vegetables, pastures, shrubbery and lawns in downstate New York is reported running into the millions.

In Texas, one of the early drought states, the cotton harvest is going on apace but fall planting is hampered. Recently-planted wheat in north Texas is deteriorating rapidly.

The Indian summer weather also favors a harvest work in the corn belt of the Midwest and elsewhere. But there is worry about the winter wheat. Dry, warm conditions make the soil hard and deprive newly-planted seeds of needed moisture.

Minnesota farmers, for instance, find difficulty in making plow points break through caked ground. The tough crust is preventing the planting of winter wheat in Maryland.

Some farmers are hauling water for their stock in southern Iowa. Many cities in Iowa have barred outdoor fires.

Many towns in Nebraska are enforcing bans against burning leaves and trash outdoors.
