Caf Changes

by Jason Corsi

The cafeteria has been experiencing secretive cracker raids in its waking hours. It seems cafeteria eaters have too great a liking for such wee items as peanut butter, jams, crackers, and butters. The Marriott management has this to say of the pillages: "Students (or stealy profs) who take four cracker packages don't seem to realize that we buy these things. The end result is a loss in profits for us."

This cracker dilemma largely seems to be escalating as growing students in earnest strive towards better nutrition. The students who dine at the cafeteria (90% of the picture) are airing a message: if we can't get enough for our dollar, we'll fill up the rest with frills, like but-ter, crackers, and the like.

If this diabolical activity continues, says a student cafeteria representative, prices may go up, noting that the perpetrators are, in effect, shooting themselves in the foot. The cracker business has forced Marriott into a stalemate. Policy, being pushed to its limits, has it that prices remain untarnished until September.

Other developments include Hairnets; the staff wear invisible (see-thru models). Whatever a few poor souls experienced in their Reuben sandwiches during the Rock n' Roll Dinner (another development) clearly wasn't owned by the staff.

From recent information I have it that the staff welcomes your comments a la serviette bad and good, and does work towards pleasing you the customer.

P.S. You can't have the Dean or Marilyn or any of the 45's. Marriott's reserving them for another one of the swingin' contests-dinners.
