

Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Parent are entertaining New Year's Eve at their home in Fairview. From left to right: Mr. Parent, Mrs. Parent, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Cook, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Cook, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Cook, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Cook.

WOMEN

Lenz Caroline McLure, Women's Editor. Phone 6508

Page 8 The Guardian Tuesday, Dec. 31, 1957

HAPPENINGS

God bless this year — they come in, they go out, they rest, they travel about, they try, they smooth the rough, the dear, God bless this year.

New Year's Day in Charlottetown is the one on which gentlemen call. They pay their visits in twos or threes together. Some of the calls are at private homes, but the great majority are at Government House, the Premier's residence and City Hall.

Jon J. A. Bernard who came to Charlottetown from Boston to attend the funeral of his intimate friend, Sir Wm. McMillan has returned to Boston to spend New Year's with his daughter Mrs. Loh and her husband, Dr. Loh of West Roxbury. He is also to meet others of his family in the persons of Omer J. Bernard, Toronto City Accountant, Edith Bernard, superintendent Toronto Desk Phone Service and her family.

Mrs. Patrick Bolger, accountant auditor with the Nova Scotia Government, returned by plane to Halifax after spending Christmas holidays at her home in Halifax.

Messrs. Edwin Clow and Elmer Gamble, both employees of the Amalgamated Dairy, Summerside, left Sunday afternoon for Granby, Quebec, where they will spend a few days on business.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Cudmore of Halifax and their son are in this province for the holidays and are with Mrs. Harry Cudmore, 113 North River Road and with Mr. and Mrs. J. Dawson, Kensington.

Miss Claire McIsaac, student at St. Dunstan's University, is spending her holidays at her home in Fairview.

Mr. Emery Melancon of the Provincial Bank, Charlottetown, and Mrs. Melancon spent Christmas at their homes in Moncton.

Miss Lorrna Walsh, student at Notre Dame Academy, is spending her holidays with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Walsh, Nine Mile Creek.

Mr. Joseph Walsh, Provincial Bank, Charlottetown, spent his Christmas at his home in Nine Mile Creek.

Miss Mona Wilson of Charlottetown, P.E.I., was in Toronto over the Christmas holidays. Miss Wilson was a guest at the Park Plaza Hotel, Bloor Street.

Miss Ruth Ross entertained at bridge Saturday evening at her residence, Oriole Street. Three tables were in play.

Mr. W. Chester S. Coles, Kingston, Ontario, spent Christmas in Ottawa with members of his family which included Mrs. Mrs. Hollis Cruys, Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Hall and Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Coles.

Mr. J. B. Macdonald, Moncton, was registered at the Queen Hotel for the Christmas holidays and visited with his sisters, Mrs.

Mr. James Kennedy, Montreal, is spending the holiday season with his mother, Mrs. C. M. Kennedy, Kensington.

Mr. George Henderson returned by plane Friday afternoon to Bridgewater, N.S., after spending Christmas with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Henderson.

Miss Barbara England, R.N., Montreal, Quebec, who spent the Christmas holidays with her parents, returned on Friday by plane.

Miss Helen Cameron, R.N., returned by plane Friday to Montreal, Que., after spending Christmas with her family here. Her mother, Helen attended the Christmas Mass being held at the Trinity United Church, where she was one of the bridesmaids.

Mr. Johnny Allan spent Christmas with his father, Dr. A. A. Allan and family.

Mr. Basil Phillips, who is returning at Acadia University, is returning for the holidays with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wendell Phillips.

Mr. Patrick Bolger, accountant auditor with the Nova Scotia Government, returned by plane to Halifax after spending Christmas holidays at her home in Halifax.

Messrs. Edwin Clow and Elmer Gamble, both employees of the Amalgamated Dairy, Summerside, left Sunday afternoon for Granby, Quebec, where they will spend a few days on business.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Cudmore of Halifax and their son are in this province for the holidays and are with Mrs. Harry Cudmore, 113 North River Road and with Mr. and Mrs. J. Dawson, Kensington.

Miss Claire McIsaac, student at St. Dunstan's University, is spending her holidays at her home in Fairview.

How do you stand in regard to New Year's Resolutions? Your attitude and the nature of your resolutions can provide the KEY to your REAL AGE! Why not? Ever since physicians and psychiatrists have agreed that our body is a certificate, it is a fact that "does not tell the story, the division between one age group and another has become a headless fully vague and we can practically set our marker wherever we wish. The following conclusions are the result of a study of the New Year's resolutions can give away your age. But often we are in doubt. Sometimes we feel as young as a Hun-ho-ho! (as suggested above) as reliable a way as any of fixing your position on the Age Scale. The following conclusions arrived at over a somewhat lengthy period of observation and experience may be helpful.

YOU ARE OLD

If you no longer care anything about New Year's Resolutions, my friends you are OLD when you are 30 or 40!

YOU ARE ELDERLY

When you refuse to believe you were ever foolish enough to in-

WE AND OUR NEIGHBORS

New Year's Resolutions Betray Your Real Age

Rubamah S. Frank

How do you stand in regard to New Year's Resolutions? Your attitude and the nature of your resolutions can provide the KEY to your REAL AGE! Why not? Ever since physicians and psychiatrists have agreed that our body is a certificate, it is a fact that "does not tell the story, the division between one age group and another has become a headless fully vague and we can practically set our marker wherever we wish. The following conclusions are the result of a study of the New Year's resolutions can give away your age. But often we are in doubt. Sometimes we feel as young as a Hun-ho-ho! (as suggested above) as reliable a way as any of fixing your position on the Age Scale. The following conclusions arrived at over a somewhat lengthy period of observation and experience may be helpful.

PLEASANT VALLEY W.M.S.

On December 12, the Pleasant Valley Auxiliary of the W.M.S. met at the home of Mrs. Milton Weeks. The following conclusions arrived at over a somewhat lengthy period of observation and experience may be helpful.

Mrs. Herb Gil conducted a Christmas Service of Worship, taken from the Missionary Monthly. Those taking part were: Mrs. Gerald Smith, Mrs. George Smith, Mrs. N.A. Cutcliffe and Mrs. Melville Weeks. Carol singing included "There's a song in the air," "Silent Night," "Oh Little Town of Bethlehem" and "Hark the Herald Angels Sing."

Minutes of previous meeting were read and approved. Sixteen members answered the roll call. There were four visitors: Miss Reeves, Thelma Offenberg and Mrs. Whitfield Abbott.

The treasurer reported $228 raised by the Auxiliary and its affiliations. The Auxiliary was responsible for $151. Pleasant Valley Mission Band $22, Fredrick Mission Band $40. Baby Buds $14. It was moved and seconded that 90 cents be paid the treasurer for postage.

Items for the Port Worker at Halifax were passed in and Mrs. Melville Weeks consented to be responsible for sending the parcels to her.

A thank you note for fruit received was read. Community Secretary recorded calls made and cards sent. Next meeting is to be held at the home of Mrs. F.W. Cutcliffe. Next it is expected that Miss Mary MacDuff, missionary from Angola will be available to speak to us. This will be on the afternoon of Friday, January 24th.

The following are the appointments of committee: Worship, Mrs. Ben Grant, Mrs. Ruth Weeks, Mrs. Melville Weeks, Mrs. Loretta Weeks, Mrs. W.E. Stevenson.

It was moved and seconded that these be the officers for the ensuing year. With the exceptions of the President and Baby Buds leader The re-elected are: President, Mrs. Wendell Grasswell. Vice president, Mrs. F.W. Cutcliffe. Recording secretary, Mrs. Milton Weeks. Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. W.E. Stevenson. Treasurer, Mrs. N.A. Cutcliffe. Associate helpers, secretary.

Mrs. Herb Gil, Christian Stewardship secretary. Mrs. Miller Weeks, Literature Secretary, Mrs. James S. Murray. Missionary Monthly and World friends secretary, Mrs. Whitfield Abbott. Community friendship secretary, Mrs. Melville Weeks. Supply secretary, Mrs. Clinton Glyden. Press Secretary, Mrs. Roy Weeks. Mission Band leaders, Fredrick, Mrs. Weeks. Baby Buds, Mrs. Harry Weeks. Pleasant Valley Mrs. Melville Weeks. Baby band leaders, Mrs. George Smith, Organist, Mrs. W.E. Stevenson.

The singing of hymn "In Christ There is no East or West" and prayer offered by Mrs. Gerald Smith closed the meeting. After which lunch was served by the hostess and committee in charge.

BIENEZER W. I.

The December meeting of Ebenezer W. I. met at the home of Mrs. Clifton Matheson. The meeting opened with the Mary Stewart collect followed by the roll call which was answered by thirteen members and one visitor.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and adopted. The sick committee reported gifts of fruit had been sent to two members, and these bills were paid.

The new committees for the next three months are: Sick, Mrs. Malcolm Andrews and Mrs. Ches. Dext. School, Mrs. Lincoln MacLain and Mrs. Douglas MacDouglas. A Christmas treat of candy, nuts and apples is to be given to the school children at their concert.

It was decided that a crokinole board be bought and sent to the Protestant Orphanage, Mrs. Claude MacLain and Mrs. Allison MacLain were appointed to attend to this. The Red Cross convenor for the coming year is Mrs. Hubert Darway.

The meeting adjourned after which lunch was served by the hostess and committee in charge.

JUST IN TIME TO SAY

HAPPY NEW YEAR!

Stewart Bakeries Ltd.

We're Not The Biggest But... We're The Proudest!

Proud Of Our Products Proud Of Our Employees

Our merchandise, we sincerely believe, is the finest available. We will never alibi for the quality of the brands we offer, and have sold you good people of the Charlottetown trading area.

Proud Of Our Community Proud That We Live Here

Communities are comprised of people... people whose dreams, faith, hope, love and toils are combined. With their churches, schools, shopping facilities and friendly people... what more could we ask for.

That we shop here, worship here, and that our investment is here... our dollars are made here and spent here. We are proud to be a part of the community of Charlottetown.

LePAGE SHOE CO., LTD.

DIAL 4748

"There Is No Substitute for Newspaper Advertising"

OUR 38th ANNUAL SALE BEGINS MONDAY, JANUARY 6th

"The Home of Good Shoes Since 1920"

ONLY $79.95

F. A. McCourt

383 Pictary St. Phone 6553

HOUSEHOLD HINT

Before washing heavily soiled work or play clothes soaked for 15 minutes in hot soapy water to which half a cup of ammonia has been added.

START THE NEW YEAR WITH A ROYALTY

Everybody Reads Newspapers

No other advertising medium reaches so many people so often. And remember... your newspaper reaches the people who are most likely to be YOUR customers.

ONLY $79.95

F. A. McCourt

383 Pictary St. Phone 6553

WIFE PRESERVERS

Could you sometimes be avoided and headaches and nervous tension at Saskatchewan and Alberta — is vividly depicted; and likewise, the toughness of the self-protection of the struggle with their principles uncompromised and their pride in their work, and what a hard-working, adventurous and wood-

erful life he has led! In reading Mr. Cashman's account of it, anyone who has grown up in the comparatively "soft" conditions of recent decades — that is, apart from war — is bound to acquire a new respect for the builders of the west.

Mr. Cashman is by nature and training a story-teller and he gives us a grand story here. His delivery seems like "jerky" at first, yet the short sentences and pithy phrases keep the narrative in motion all the time. There is much humor in it and much of human courage and truth — J.C.M.

Alberta's lieutenant-governor, the Honorable J. J. Bowen, is a big man physically and much bigger still in terms of achievement. The story of his life is the story of how the Canadian west was built by men big in mind and heart who believed in hard work and in taking risks, and putting their beliefs into practice with extraordinary results. Thus, "Tony" Cashman of Edmonton gives us two great stories in the biography of the subject. These are detail and action. One can read many volumes on the subject, but in this one the writer has to comprehend and sum up the larger movement of the west without being lost in the details. The biography can look at the past the other way around, dealing primarily with individuals — one in particular — and with human values, and giving the reader a sense of the larger movement of events as seen through the portals of individual life. The biographer may however, fall somewhat between the two stools and produce a rather ponderous book, when he tries to describe both. Mr. Cashman, happily has avoided this pitfall by giving us the life of his subject and of "the old days" in fine detail and by focusing attention on the action in which J. J. Bowen has been engaged throughout most of his long life.

The harshness of those days — in "Irish" Boston, in early Manitoba, in Saskatchewan and Alberta — is vividly depicted; and likewise, the toughness of the self-protection of the struggle with their principles uncompromised and their pride in their work, and what a hard-working, adventurous and wood-

erful life he has led! In reading Mr. Cashman's account of it, anyone who has grown up in the comparatively "soft" conditions of recent decades — that is, apart from war — is bound to acquire a new respect for the builders of the west.

Mr. Cashman is by nature and training a story-teller and he gives us a grand story here. His delivery seems like "jerky" at first, yet the short sentences and pithy phrases keep the narrative in motion all the time. There is much humor in it and much of human courage and truth — J.C.M.

Alberta's lieutenant-governor, the Honorable J. J. Bowen, is a big man physically and much bigger still in terms of achievement. The story of his life is the story of how the Canadian west was built by men big in mind and heart who believed in hard work and in taking risks, and putting their beliefs into practice with extraordinary results. Thus, "Tony" Cashman of Edmonton gives us two great stories in the biography of the subject. These are detail and action. One can read many volumes on the subject, but in this one the writer has to comprehend and sum up the larger movement of the west without being lost in the details. The biography can look at the past the other way around, dealing primarily with individuals — one in particular — and with human values, and giving the reader a sense of the larger movement of events as seen through the portals of individual life. The biographer may however, fall somewhat between the two stools and produce a rather ponderous book, when he tries to describe both. Mr. Cashman, happily has avoided this pitfall by giving us the life of his subject and of "the old days" in fine detail and by focusing attention on the action in which J. J. Bowen has been engaged throughout most of his long life.

The harshness of those days — in "Irish" Boston, in early Manitoba, in Saskatchewan and Alberta — is vividly depicted; and likewise, the toughness of the self-protection of the struggle with their principles uncompromised and their pride in their work, and what a hard-working, adventurous and wood-

erful life he has led! In reading Mr. Cashman's account of it, anyone who has grown up in the comparatively "soft" conditions of recent decades — that is, apart from war — is bound to acquire a new respect for the builders of the west.

Mr. Cashman is by nature and training a story-teller and he gives us a grand story here. His delivery seems like "jerky" at first, yet the short sentences and pithy phrases keep the narrative in motion all the time. There is much humor in it and much of human courage and truth — J.C.M.

Alberta's lieutenant-governor, the Honorable J. J. Bowen, is a big man physically and much bigger still in terms of achievement. The story of his life is the story of how the Canadian west was built by men big in mind and heart who believed in hard work and in taking risks, and putting their beliefs into practice with extraordinary results. Thus, "Tony" Cashman of Edmonton gives us two great stories in the biography of the subject. These are detail and action. One can read many volumes on the subject, but in this one the writer has to comprehend and sum up the larger movement of the west without being lost in the details. The biography can look at the past the other way around, dealing primarily with individuals — one in particular — and with human values, and giving the reader a sense of the larger movement of events as seen through the portals of individual life. The biographer may however, fall somewhat between the two stools and produce a rather ponderous book, when he tries to describe both. Mr. Cashman, happily has avoided this pitfall by giving us the life of his subject and of "the old days" in fine detail and by focusing attention on the action in which J. J. Bowen has been engaged throughout most of his long life.

The harshness of those days — in "Irish" Boston, in early Manitoba, in Saskatchewan and Alberta — is vividly depicted; and likewise, the toughness of the self-protection of the struggle with their principles uncompromised and their pride in their work, and what a hard-working, adventurous and wood-

erful life he has led! In reading Mr. Cashman's account of it, anyone who has grown up in the comparatively "soft" conditions of recent decades — that is, apart from war — is bound to acquire a new respect for the builders of the west.

Mr. Cashman is by nature and training a story-teller and he gives us a grand story here. His delivery seems like "jerky" at first, yet the short sentences and pithy phrases keep the narrative in motion all the time. There is much humor in it and much of human courage and truth — J.C.M.

Alberta's lieutenant-governor, the Honorable J. J. Bowen, is a big man physically and much bigger still in terms of achievement. The story of his life is the story of how the Canadian west was built by men big in mind and heart who believed in hard work and in taking risks, and putting their beliefs into practice with extraordinary results. Thus, "Tony" Cashman of Edmonton gives us two great stories in the biography of the subject. These are detail and action. One can read many volumes on the subject, but in this one the writer has to comprehend and sum up the larger movement of the west without being lost in the details. The biography can look at the past the other way around, dealing primarily with individuals — one in particular — and with human values, and giving the reader a sense of the larger movement of events as seen through the portals of individual life. The biographer may however, fall somewhat between the two stools and produce a rather ponderous book, when he tries to describe both. Mr. Cashman, happily has avoided this pitfall by giving us the life of his subject and of "the old days" in fine detail and by focusing attention on the action in which J. J. Bowen has been engaged throughout most of his long life.

The harshness of those days — in "Irish" Boston, in early Manitoba, in Saskatchewan and Alberta — is vividly depicted; and likewise, the toughness of the self-protection of the struggle with their principles uncompromised and their pride in their work, and what a hard-working, adventurous and wood-

erful life he has led! In reading Mr. Cashman's account of it, anyone who has grown up in the comparatively "soft" conditions of recent decades — that is, apart from war — is bound to acquire a new respect for the builders of the west.

Mr. Cashman is by nature and training a story-teller and he gives us a grand story here. His delivery seems like "jerky" at first, yet the short sentences and pithy phrases keep the narrative in motion all the time. There is much humor in it and much of human courage and truth — J.C.M.

Alberta's lieutenant-governor, the Honorable J. J. Bowen, is a big man physically and much bigger still in terms of achievement. The story of his life is the story of how the Canadian west was built by men big in mind and heart who believed in hard work and in taking risks, and putting their beliefs into practice with extraordinary results. Thus, "Tony" Cashman of Edmonton gives us two great stories in the biography of the subject. These are detail and action. One can read many volumes on the subject, but in this one the writer has to comprehend and sum up the larger movement of the west without being lost in the details. The biography can look at the past the other way around, dealing primarily with individuals — one in particular — and with human values, and giving the reader a sense of the larger movement of events as seen through the portals of individual life. The biographer may however, fall somewhat between the two stools and produce a rather ponderous book, when he tries to describe both. Mr. Cashman, happily has avoided this pitfall by giving us the life of his subject and of "the old days" in fine detail and by focusing attention on the action in which J. J. Bowen has been engaged throughout most of his long life.

The harshness of those days — in "Irish" Boston, in early Manitoba, in Saskatchewan and Alberta — is vividly depicted; and likewise, the toughness of the self-protection of the struggle with their principles uncompromised and their pride in their work, and what a hard-working, adventurous and wood-

erful life he has led! In reading Mr. Cashman's account of it, anyone who has grown up in the comparatively "soft" conditions of recent decades — that is, apart from war — is bound to acquire a new respect for the builders of the west.

Mr. Cashman is by nature and training a story-teller and he gives us a grand story here. His delivery seems like "jerky" at first, yet the short sentences and pithy phrases keep the narrative in motion all the time. There is much humor in it and much of human courage and truth — J.C.M.

Alberta's lieutenant-governor, the Honorable J. J. Bowen, is a big man physically and much bigger still in terms of achievement. The story of his life is the story of how the Canadian west was built by men big in mind and heart who believed in hard work and in taking risks, and putting their beliefs into practice with extraordinary results. Thus, "Tony" Cashman of Edmonton gives us two great stories in the biography of the subject. These are detail and action. One can read many volumes on the subject, but in this one the writer has to comprehend and sum up the larger movement of the west without being lost in the details. The biography can look at the past the other way around, dealing primarily with individuals — one in particular — and with human values, and giving the reader a sense of the larger movement of events as seen through the portals of individual life. The biographer may however, fall somewhat between the two stools and produce a rather ponderous book, when he tries to describe both. Mr. Cashman, happily has avoided this pitfall by giving us the life of his subject and of "the old days" in fine detail and by focusing attention on the action in which J. J. Bowen has been engaged throughout most of his long life.

The harshness of those days — in "Irish" Boston, in early Manitoba, in Saskatchewan and Alberta — is vividly depicted; and likewise, the toughness of the self-protection of the struggle with their principles uncompromised and their pride in their work, and what a hard-working, adventurous and wood-

erful life he has led! In reading Mr. Cashman's account of it, anyone who has grown up in the comparatively "soft" conditions of recent decades — that is, apart from war — is bound to acquire a new respect for the builders of the west.

Mr. Cashman is by nature and training a story-teller and he gives us a grand story here. His delivery seems like "jerky" at first, yet the short sentences and pithy phrases keep the narrative in motion all the time. There is much humor in it and much of human courage and truth — J.C.M.

Alberta's lieutenant-governor, the Honorable J. J. Bowen, is a big man physically and much bigger still in terms of achievement. The story of his life is the story of how the Canadian west was built by men big in mind and heart who believed in hard work and in taking risks, and putting their beliefs into practice with extraordinary results. Thus, "Tony" Cashman of Edmonton gives us two great stories in the biography of the subject. These are detail and action. One can read many volumes on the subject, but in this one the writer has to comprehend and sum up the larger movement of the west without being lost in the details. The biography can look at the past the other way around, dealing primarily with individuals — one in particular — and with human values, and giving the reader a sense of the larger movement of events as seen through the portals of individual life. The biographer may however, fall somewhat between the two stools and produce a rather ponderous book, when he tries to describe both. Mr. Cashman, happily has avoided this pitfall by giving us the life of his subject and of "the old days" in fine detail and by focusing attention on the action in which J. J. Bowen has been engaged throughout most of his long life.

The harshness of those days — in "Irish" Boston, in early Manitoba, in Saskatchewan and Alberta — is vividly depicted; and likewise, the toughness of the self-protection of the struggle with their principles uncompromised and their pride in their work, and what a hard-working, adventurous and wood-

erful life he has led! In reading Mr. Cashman's account of it, anyone who has grown up in the comparatively "soft" conditions of recent decades — that is, apart from war — is bound to acquire a new respect for the builders of the west.

Mr. Cashman is by nature and training a story-teller and he gives us a grand story here. His delivery seems like "jerky" at first, yet the short sentences and pithy phrases keep the narrative in motion all the time. There is much humor in it and much of human courage and truth — J.C.M.

Alberta's lieutenant-governor, the Honorable J. J. Bowen, is a big man physically and much bigger still in terms of achievement. The story of his life is the story of how the Canadian west was built by men big in mind and heart who believed in hard work and in taking risks, and putting their beliefs into practice with extraordinary results. Thus, "Tony" Cashman of Edmonton gives us two great stories in the biography of the subject. These are detail and action. One can read many volumes on the subject, but in this one the writer has to comprehend and sum up the larger movement of the west without being lost in the details. The biography can look at the past the other way around, dealing primarily with individuals — one in particular — and with human values, and giving the reader a sense of the larger movement of events as seen through the portals of individual life. The biographer may however, fall somewhat between the two stools and produce a rather ponderous book, when he tries to describe both. Mr. Cashman, happily has avoided this pitfall by giving us the life of his subject and of "the old days" in fine detail and by focusing attention on the action in which J. J. Bowen has been engaged throughout most of his long life.

The harshness of those days — in "Irish" Boston, in early Manitoba, in Saskatchewan and Alberta — is vividly depicted; and likewise, the toughness of the self-protection of the struggle with their principles uncompromised and their pride in their work, and what a hard-working, adventurous and wood-

erful life he has led! In reading Mr. Cashman's account of it, anyone who has grown up in the comparatively "soft" conditions of recent decades — that is, apart from war — is bound to acquire a new respect for the builders of the west.

Mr. Cashman is by nature and training a story-teller and he gives us a grand story here. His delivery seems like "jerky" at first, yet the short sentences and pithy phrases keep the narrative in motion all the time. There is much humor in it and much of human courage and truth — J.C.M.

Alberta's lieutenant-governor, the Honorable J. J. Bowen, is a big man physically and much bigger still in terms of achievement. The story of his life is the story of how the Canadian west was built by men big in mind and heart who believed in hard work and in taking risks, and putting their beliefs into practice with extraordinary results. Thus, "Tony" Cashman of Edmonton gives us two great stories in the biography of the subject. These are detail and action. One can read many volumes on the subject, but in this one the writer has to comprehend and sum up the larger movement of the west without being lost in the details. The biography can look at the past the other way around, dealing primarily with individuals — one in particular — and with human values, and giving the reader a sense of the larger movement of events as seen through the portals of individual life. The biographer may however, fall somewhat between the two stools and produce a rather ponderous book, when he tries to describe both. Mr. Cashman, happily has avoided this pitfall by giving us the life of his subject and of "the old days" in fine detail and by focusing attention on the action in which J. J. Bowen has been engaged throughout most of his long life.

The harshness of those days — in "Irish" Boston, in early Manitoba, in Saskatchewan and Alberta — is vividly depicted; and likewise, the toughness of the self-protection of the struggle with their principles uncompromised and their pride in their work, and what a hard-working, adventurous and wood-

erful life he has led! In reading Mr. Cashman's account of it, anyone who has grown up in the comparatively "soft" conditions of recent decades — that is, apart from war — is bound to acquire a new respect for the builders of the west.

Mr. Cashman is by nature and training a story-teller and he gives us a grand story here. His delivery seems like "jerky" at first, yet the short sentences and pithy phrases keep the narrative in motion all the time. There is much humor in it and much of human courage and truth — J.C.M.

Alberta's lieutenant-governor, the Honorable J. J. Bowen, is a big man physically and much bigger still in terms of achievement. The story of his life is the story of how the Canadian west was built by men big in mind and heart who believed in hard work and in taking risks, and putting their beliefs into practice with extraordinary results. Thus, "Tony" Cashman of Edmonton gives us two great stories in the biography of the subject. These are detail and action. One can read many volumes on the subject, but in this one the writer has to comprehend and sum up the larger movement of the west without being lost in the details. The biography can look at the past the other way around, dealing primarily with individuals — one in particular — and with human values, and giving the reader a sense of the larger movement of events as seen through the portals of individual life. The biographer may however, fall somewhat between the two stools and produce a rather ponderous book, when he tries to describe both. Mr. Cashman, happily has avoided this pitfall by giving us the life of his subject and of "the old days" in fine detail and by focusing attention on the action in which J. J. Bowen has been engaged throughout most of his long life.

The harshness of those days — in "Irish" Boston, in early Manitoba, in Saskatchewan and Alberta — is vividly depicted; and likewise, the toughness of the self-protection of the struggle with their principles uncompromised and their pride in their work, and what a hard-working, adventurous and wood-

erful life he has led! In reading Mr. Cashman's account of it, anyone who has grown up in the comparatively "soft" conditions of recent decades — that is, apart from war — is bound to acquire a new respect for the builders of the west.

Mr. Cashman is by nature and training a story-teller and he gives us a grand story here. His delivery seems like "jerky" at first, yet the short sentences and pithy phrases keep the narrative in motion all the time. There is much humor in it and much of human courage and truth — J.C.M.

Alberta's lieutenant-governor, the Honorable J. J. Bowen, is a big man physically and much bigger still in terms of achievement. The story of his life is the story of how the Canadian west was built by men big in mind and heart who believed in hard work and in taking risks, and putting their beliefs into practice with extraordinary results. Thus, "Tony" Cashman of Edmonton gives us two great stories in the biography of the subject. These are detail and action. One can read many volumes on the subject, but in this one the writer has to comprehend and sum up the larger movement of the west without being lost in the details. The biography can look at the past the other way around, dealing primarily with individuals — one in particular — and with human values, and giving the reader a sense of the larger movement of events as seen through the portals of individual life. The biographer may however, fall somewhat between the two stools and produce a rather ponderous book, when he tries to describe both. Mr. Cashman, happily has avoided this pitfall by giving us the life of his subject and of "the old days" in fine detail and by focusing attention on the action in which J. J. Bowen has been engaged throughout most of his long life.

The harshness of those days — in "Irish" Boston, in early Manitoba, in Saskatchewan and Alberta — is vividly depicted; and likewise, the toughness of the self-protection of the struggle with their principles uncompromised and their pride in their work, and what a hard-working, adventurous and wood-

erful life he has led! In reading Mr. Cashman's account of it, anyone who has grown up in the comparatively "soft" conditions of recent decades — that is, apart from war — is bound to acquire a new respect for the builders of the west.

Mr. Cashman is by nature and training a story-teller and he gives us a grand story here. His delivery seems like "jerky" at first, yet the short sentences and pithy phrases keep the narrative in motion all the time. There is much humor in it and much of human courage and truth — J.C.M.

Alberta's lieutenant-governor, the Honorable J. J. Bowen, is a big man physically and much bigger still in terms of achievement. The story of his life is the story of how the Canadian west was built by men big in mind and heart who believed in hard work and in taking risks, and putting their beliefs into practice with extraordinary results. Thus, "Tony" Cashman of Edmonton gives us two great stories in the biography of the subject. These are detail and action. One can read many volumes on the subject, but in this one the writer has to comprehend and sum up the larger movement of the west without being lost in the details. The biography can look at the past the other way around, dealing primarily with individuals — one in particular — and with human values, and giving the reader a sense of the larger movement of events as seen through the portals of individual life. The biographer may however, fall somewhat between the two stools and produce a rather ponder