PREDICTS VICTORY

LONDON (Reuters) — Prime Minister Harold Macmillan said Friday he is confident his Conservative party will win the next general election, but he would not say when the election will take place. He can call for voting any time up to the autumn of 1964. Speaking to 1,000 delegates from local Conservative associations, meeting here, Macmillan said: "I am persuaded it will turn out all right in the election of nineteen-sixty . . . well whatever it is." However, he said there is a danger that people who vote for the small Liberal party could put a Labor government in by accident and that would be "disastrous."
