CHAPTER IV.

At her next visit she laid a nosegay on his bed, and gossiped away, talking of everything in the world except Miss Rolleston.
At last she came to a pause, and Seaton laid his hand on her arm directly; and, looking pitiously on her face spoke the first word:
"Does she love him?"
"What, still harping on her?" said Wilson.
"Well, she doesn't hate him, I suppose, or she would not marry him."
"For pity's sake don't trifle with me! Does she love him?"
"La, James, how can I tell! She mayn't love him quite as much as I could love a man that took my fancy, (here she cast a lingering glance on Seaton) 'but I see no difference between her and other young ladies. Miss is very fond of her papa, for one thing and he favors the match. Aye, and she likes her partner well enough; she is brighter like, now he is in the house, and she reads all her friends' letters to him ever so lovingly; and I do notice she leans on him, out walking, a trifle more than there is any need for."

At this picture James Seaton writhed in his bed like some agonized creature under vivisection; but the woman spurred by jealousy, and also by egotistical passion, had no mercy left for him.
"And why not, continued she: 'he is young, and handsome, and rich, and he dotes on her. If you are really her friend, you ought to be glad she is so well suited.'" At this admonition the tears stood in Seaton's eyes, and after a while he got strength to say:
"I know I ought, I know it, if he is only worthy of her, as any man could be."
"That he is, James. Why, I'll be bound you have heard of him. It is young Mr.
Wardlaw."

Seaton started up in bed.
"Who? Wardlaw! What Wardlaw?"
"What Wardlaw? Why, the great London merchant, his son. Leastways, he manages the whole concern now, I hear; the old gentleman, he is retired, by all accounts."

"Curse him! curse him! curse him!" yelled James Seaton, with his eyes glaring fiercely, and both hands beating the air.
"Sarah Wilson recoiled with alarm.
"That angel marry him!" shrieked Seaton.
"Never, while I live, I'll throttle him with these hands first!"

What more his ungovernable fury would have uttered was interrupted by a rush of nurses and attendants and Wilson was bundled out of the place with little ceremony.
He contrived, however, to hurl a word after her, accompanied with a look of concentrated rage and resolution.
"Never, I tell you—while I live!"

At her next visit to the hospital, Wilson was refused admission by order of the head surgeon. She left her flowers daily all the same.
After a few days she thought the matter might have cooled, and having a piece of news to communicate to Seaton, with respect to Arthur Wardlaw, she asked to see that patient.
"Left the hospital this morning," was the reply.

"What, cured?"
"Why not? We have cured worse cases than his."
"Where has he gone to? Pray tell me."
"Oh, certainly."
An inquiry was made. But the reply was:
"Left no address."

Sarah Wilson, like many other women of high and low degree, had swift misgivings of mischief to come. She was taken with a fit of trembling, and had to sit down in the hall.
And, to tell the truth, she had cause to tremble; for that tongue of hers had launched two wild beasts—Jealousy and Revenge.

When she got better she went home, and, coward-like, said not a word to a living soul.
That day Arthur Wardlaw dined with General Rolleston and Helen. They were to be alone for a certain reason; and he came half an hour before dinner. Helen thought he would, and was ready for him on the lawn.
They walked arm-in-arm, talking of the happiness before them, and regretting a temporary separation that was to intervene.
He was her father's choice, and she loved her father devotedly; he was her male property, and young ladies like that sort of property; especially when they see nothing to dislike in it. He loved her passionately, and that was her due, and pleased her and drew a gentle affection, if not a passion from her in return. Yes, that lovely forehead did come very near young Wardlaw's shoulder more than once or twice, as they strolled slowly up and down on the soft mossy turf.

And, on the other side of the hedge that bounded the lawn, a man lay crouched in the ditch, and saw it all with gleaming eyes.
Just before the affianced ones went in,
Helen said:
"I have a little favor to ask you, dear.
The poor man, Seaton, who fought the robbers and was wounded, papa says he is a man of education, and wanted to be a clerk or something. Could you find him a place?"
"I think I can," said Wardlaw, "indeed I am sure. A line to White & Co., will do it; they want a shipping-clerk."
"Oh, how good you are!" said Helen; and lifted her face all beaming with thanks.

The opportunity was tempting; the lover fond; two faces met for a single moment; and one of the two burned for five minutes after.
The basilisk eyes saw the soft collision; but the owners of those eyes did not hear the words that earned him that torture.
He lay still and bided his time.

General Rolleston's house stood clear of the town at the end of a short, but narrow and tortuous lane. This situation had tempted the burglars whom Seaton baffled; and now it tempted Seaton.
Wardlaw must pass that way on leaving General Rolleston's house.
At the bend of the lane two twin elms stood out a foot or two from the hedge.
Seaton got behind these at about ten o'clock, and watched for him with a patience and immobility that boded ill.

His preparations for this encounter were singular. He had a close-shutting ink-stand and a pen, and one sheet of paper, at the top of which he had written "Sydney," and the day of the month and year, leaving the rest blank. And he had the revolver with which he had shot the robber at Helen Rolleston's window; and a barrel of that arm was loaded with swan shot.
(To be continued.)

A Pennsylvania farmer, suspicious of banks and fearful of burglars, placed all his wealth of notes, mortgages, etc., in the parlor stove, with the result of finding on his return home after a day's absence that his wife had lit the fire, and he was minus his life's savings.

John Quincy Adams received a salary from the United States Government for sixty-nine years. At the close of his presidential term he had fifty-two years of office holding, and his salary had aggregated $425,000, still he had seventeen years of congress after this, and died at the capital at a congressional session.

A St. Petersburg despatch states that a prominent Russian statesman says Vera Philipova, arrested at Kharkoff, was the actual head of the Nihilist Executive Committee. She has written a voluminous confession showing that she and another woman, who chose the south of Russia as their field of enterprise, alienated the allegiance of many army officers, forty of whom have been arrested.

Matthew Arnold visited Brooklyn on Sunday and heard Henry Ward Beecher preach. They had an interview after the services, when there were mutual interchanges of esteem. Mr. Beecher said that he had read all that Mr. Arnold had ever written, including the abuse, alluding to his being termed "a heated barbarian." Mr. Arnold said he was afraid it was unjust abuse, and Mr. Beecher said: "No, no; not at all—I deserved it all; and it did me good."

The French troops have commenced the occupation of Tonquin, orders having been sent to the French commander to push matters vigorously, with the idea of compelling China to show its hand. The Marquis Tseng has received a telegram from China, explicitly contradicting M. Trico's statements, and reiterating the unqualified approval of his actions by the Chinese Government. The British Cabinet are stated to have decided that the question has now reached the verge of open war, and have taken vigorous measures for the protection of their interest in the Chinese waters.

A company is said to have been formed to carry out a "reformed theatre," a model of which has recently been exhibited. Everything possible about this theatre says the Full Mail Gazette is of iron. All the scenes and curtains are lifted and lowered by hydraulic machinery, so that only about one-sixth the number of men usually required suffice to "work" everything; and the scenes can be changed in a surprisingly short time. The stage floor is in a number of rectangular sections, each of which can be raised and lowered independently by hydraulic power. This, it is said, gives power to produce many very remarkable and picturesque effects which are impossible with ordinary stage machinery. Thus the stage may be made to slope backward and downward, so that the audience may suddenly find themselves at the top of a mountain range, looking down into a series of deep valleys.

The New York Sun's cablegram says the International Congress of Workmen in Paris has developed irreconcilable differences between the English and Continental artisans, the one advocating independent combination, subscriptions, and peaceful agitation, the others State Socialism and violent revolution. The meeting has its importance, however, in showing a revival of internationalism after thirteen years suppression. The World's special cable adds the Socialists are very active in En-land. At a recent meeting in London, plans were proposed which it was hoped would secure a united action between all the different sections. All Socialist clubs are to work in harmony, and the different nationalities represented will be in perfect accord with one another. The meeting was closely watched by the police. This week an attempt was made to hold a Socialist meeting at Vienna, but the police interfered and dispersed the meeting.

Moody has begun a great mission of six months at Islington in an iron chapel built for the occasion, which seats 5,000 people.
All around on the sides of the hall appropriate texts were displayed. Mr. Sankey sang with his customary effect. Mr.
Moody's powerful address showed he had not lost his hold on the people
