Industrial Countries Urged To Assist Underdeveloped

By JOSEPH R. COYNE
WASHINGTON (AP) — The World Bank has urged industrial countries to give a high priority to aiding underdeveloped nations, even when faced with economic problems at home.

In an annual report, published on the eve of its annual meeting and that of the International Monetary fund, the bank said aid from the industrial countries over the last five years has remained virtually stable, while the terms have become tougher.

The proportion of aid in relation to national income actually has shrunk, the bank added. The bank said much more aid is required to help underdeveloped countries cope with existing problems and to take advantage of more productive investments.

Although the increasingly heavy debt burdens of developing countries should point to aid on easier terms, the bank said, the action by some governments in recent months suggests the average terms may become tougher.

The report mentioned no names. George D. Woods, bank president, and Pierre-Paul Schweitzer, managing director of the fund, are scheduled to give the principal talks at today's opening of the joint annual meeting.

Ottawa Increases Pressure To Hold The Line On Prices

By KEN SMITH
Canadian Press Business Editor
The federal government increased its pressure last week on big business to hold their line on prices.

Two days after succeeding in having Steel Co. of Canada, Ltd., pull back a proposed price increase, the government turned on car makers and told them Canadian prices of 1967 models should not go up as much as in the United States.

No Canadian prices have been announced yet, but last week — just before the government statement — U.S. manufacturers announced increases ranging from $5 to $113 and averaging for the industry about $100.

Canadian prices are due to start coming out this week and manufacturers have declined to comment on the government stand.

Noting that the U.S. companies blamed their increases on additional safety equipment, Industry Minister Drury said this should not mean higher prices in Canada.

Instead, he argued, they devices should be paid for by the companies through savings the corporations should achieve under the Canada - U.S. limited free-trade auto pact, which allows them to exchange vehicles across the border without tariffs.

"... We would stress the special importance of such a step in this important industry at a time when the government and the Canadian people as a whole are determined to restrain excessive pressures on costs and prices," Mr. Drury said.

Stelco, reacting to a push from Finance Minister Sharp, pulled back a proposed increase it said would average less than three per cent on an estimated half of its output, and also joined with Dominion Foundries and Steel Co. in withdrawing a 3.7-per-cent boost scheduled for products from their tin mills.

The terse Stelco statement, however, made it clear the company was acting grudgingly and hinted that it may feel forced to try again.

While other businesses were, for obvious reasons, not anxious to comment publicly on the affair, they left no doubt they oppose and, in many cases, feel bitter about the government intervention.

Mr. Sharp's action was believed to be the first time in peace that the government has intervened so directly in what business regards as its own affair.

Meanwhile the possibility of an increase in the price of nickel was winning more attention. Rumors of an increase have been floating around since the annual meeting of International Nickel Co. of Canada, Ltd., last April, when Inco Chairman, Henry S. Wingate said a price rise would be needed eventually to help develop low-grade ore bodies.

He did not indicate when it might come, but analysts have predicted it would follow Inco's recent labor agreement. Nickel now sells for 88 cents a pound in Canadian funds.

Elsewhere on the business scene, a sharp slump in sales of British Columbia lumber because of a drop in housing and other factors was blamed for layoffs starting to show in that industry.

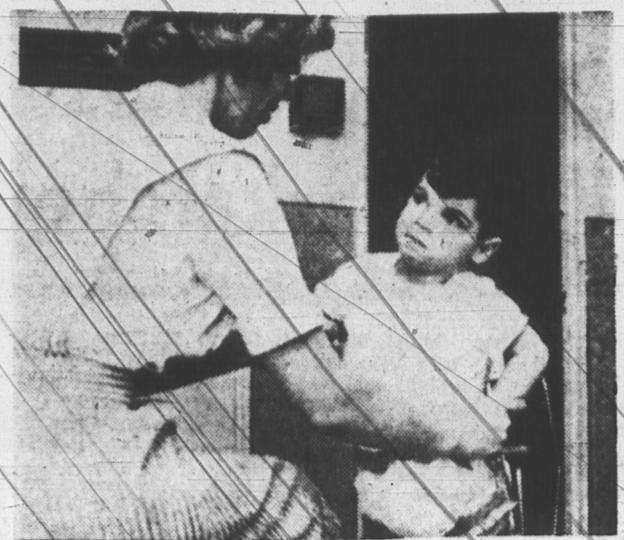

IWA LOSSES 600
The International Woodworkers of America, representing 30,000 members in the industry, said 600 men had been laid off and another 250 would be soon.

At least nine trucking firms were reported to have been forced to close down because of the glut of unsold B.C. logs.

New proposals for a $200,000,000 west-east natural gas pipeline from Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Ltd. have been referred to the National Energy Board.

They were put forward after the federal cabinet rejected Trans-Canada's original plan for the line on grounds that part of it would have passed through the United States, south of the great lakes.

HUNDREDS ROUNDED UP SAIGON (Reuters) — The South Vietnamese government has arrested hundreds of young men in the first three days of a campaign to round up deserters and draft-dodgers, military sources said here Saturday.
