Trinity Church Junior W. A. Holds Meeting

The first meeting for 1950 of the Junior Women's Association of Trinity Church was held in Social Hall on Wednesday, February 22.

Following the devotional service, conducted by Mrs. Ray Kennedy and Mrs. Helen Jones, the roll call and minutes of the previous meeting was read by the president, this was followed by a brief business meeting with the president in the chair.

The officers were elected for the coming year and are as follows: President, Mrs. Earl Taylor; treasurer, Mrs. William Henry; secretary, Miss Dorothy Keefe.

The meeting then adjourned, after which a delightful One-Act Play was presented by the "Siloki" group of the W.A., followed by refreshments. The following is a description of the play with its cast: "After the Church Supper."

Scene: Living room of Mrs.
Howards home.

Time: November evening around nine o'clock.

Six ladies, members of the Ladies' Church Guild, meet at the home of Mrs. Howard, an attractive young widow, to discuss the annual church supper which has just taken place that evening in the parish hall. Evidently it has been a good success until the women get together and begin to criticize each other's cooking for the supper. The play ends with Mrs. Howard deciding to run future church suppers herself so that everything will be perfect. The cast was as follows:

Mrs. Esther Howard, president of the Church Guild, Mrs. Margaret McKinnon.

Elsie, her maid, Mrs. Lois Crockett.

Mrs. Blossom Richards, treasurer of the Guild, Mrs. Eva Mac-Millan.

Miss Katherine Gardiner, Mrs.
Jean Garnham, Mrs. Cora Tracy, Mrs. Edith Pryor, Mrs. Ethel Clark and Mrs. Sadie Show, members of the Board.

Card Of Thanks

The members of the St. Ver-onica's (Nurses) Guild wish to express sincere thanks to the ladies of the different organizations throughout the city, and to all others, who sent donations of home cooking; also to the West End Nurseries for flowers and to all who in any way contributed to the success of their tea, at the opening of the new Hospital Pavilion.

Literature And Life

By BOOKMAN

DANTE'S PURGATORY.

In his "Dream of Gerontius," Cardinal Newman tells us about the passing of a soul and shows how it felt on its arrival at Purgatory. So impressed was the late Dr. Alexander Whyte by the reading of this poem that he said that when he came to his death-bed he wished to have it read to him and also the river scenes in the "Pilgrims Progress." The imagined details of the passing of the spirit are moving and one wonders what Matthew Arnold would think of the remarks made by observers, for Arnold gave instructions about the quiet he wished when that hour came:
"Spare me the whispering crowded room,

The friends that come, and see, and go Nor bring to see the cease to five Some doctor full of phrase and fame
Nor brother doctor of the soul . . .
Bring none of these

But move me to the window where Where I can feel the effect of the home of his daughter Mrs. William Heckbert, Summerside East. The funeral was largely attended by friends and relatives from Summerside and surrounding districts.

The Rev. K. G. Sullivan, who officiated at both services, at the home and at the grave, gave a very encouraging and sympathizing address to the mourners and friends who attended the funeral.

The hymns sung were "Safe in the Arms of Jesus," "The Lord's My Shepherd" and "Abide With Me," under the direction of the United Church Choir.

The pallbearers were P. L. Bownens, Melbourne Craig, Stanley Jack, Charles Robertson, Alfred Waite and William Heckbert.

Interment was in the People's Cemetery, Kensington.

Dorothy Dix Says —

without their having done something to you. Without their having made you cynical and bitter, or sweet and understanding; without their having at least taught you some philosophy of life.

Another superstition to which we cling is that women age more rapidly than men. Possibly this may have been the case in the past when women led narrow, dull lives and rusted out for lack of rubbing up against the world. Then, when a girl married, she was tied to her home and was expected henceforth to take her interest in life vicariously through her husband and children. A good wife and mother wasn't supposed to consider her looks or her figure, or read anything except books of devotion, and naturally she did get to look like her husband's mother.

The modern woman has changed all that. The middle-aged woman of today looks younger than her husband, even when they are approximately the same age. Also, she is peppier. She is the one who wants to go places and do things and who drags him out to places of amusement and on trips. And she belongs to study clubs and current events classes, and she is up on her politics, and hasn't the slightest idea of settling down to senility for the next twenty years.

KINDER TO WOMEN

But if men have the advantage of women in youth, age is kinder to women than it is to men. No old woman is as forlorn and lonely as an old man. Somehow the old woman can take care of herself better. She can make more of a home for herself if she has to live alone and if she has to live with others she fits in better than the old man does. And somehow people are tenderer and kinder to the old woman than they are to the old man.

The man who is too old to be in business or to follow his old occupation is lost. He is bored to death. He does not know how to kill time. But the old woman has her cronies or two; she can make patchwork quilts or crochet or knit; she can take care of her children's children and keep her heart warm with their devotion, for so often the old and the young meet on the common plane of childhood.

And so, perhaps, life, which is more just than we think, avenges ages matters up by giving men the best of age when they are young and women the best of age when they are old.

DOROTHY DIX cannot reply personally to readers, but will answer problems of general interest through her column.
