Strange But True

By F. H. MacArthur

Edward J. Riley, the famous Brooklyn lawyer, who defended Bruno Richard Hauptmann in the Lindbergh Kidnapping Case, almost lost his pants to hard-hearted Benny, a Boston pickpocket whom the lawyer was defending. The jury returned a verdict of "Not guilty" and Boston Benny walked with the triumphant Riley from the courtroom. Outside the door, Benny paid the lawyer two hundred and fifty dollars, half his fee. Then the pair shook hands and parted. Riley was still feeling pretty good inside him when he missed his watch and chain. He now reached for his wallet, holding three hundred dollars in addition to the two hundred and fifty dollars he had received from his client. It, too, was gone.

A good alibi often gets a fellow out of serious trouble. On the other hand, a poor one only helps to gum things up, or, as a New York judge recently summed it up: "An alibi the business does. It proves you wasn't where you was, and shows there's really nothing to it."

A bald pate was the means of saving the life of Frank Attaway, of Swandale, Arizona, recently, when he fell from the rear end of a freight train, knocking himself unconscious on the tracks. Then along came Aunt Hannah in her automobile. The car's headlights picked up Attaway's bald head. Immediately, she summoned help. Just in the nick of time the unconscious man was pulled from the track as another train was rapidly bearing down upon them.

According to the head teller of the National Bank in New York City, to count a million and a half one-dollar bills would take twenty-one years and one hundred and forty-seven days. The teller ought to know.

One cold morning in 1949 Mrs. Mary Mills, of Wigmore Place, London, England, was surprised to see an owl perched in the mouth of her chimney, protected from

The cold blast. Two days later, Mr. Owl was holding his seat in spite of billows of coal smoke. Mrs. Mills turned to an electric heater. The owl departed in April. Put last night, just when Jack Frost was beginning to get in some work, the owl came back to warm himself in Mrs. Wigmore's chimney.

In pioneer days, a West River farmer, who brewed a little law, usually straightened out the disputes of his neighbors and made their wills at an early hour one morning; he was awakened from his sleep by a loud knocking on the door, and entering the bedroom window, he called who was there. "It's me, John, Jim MacEachern. I couldn't sleep thinking of the will I'd made yesterday."

"What's the matter with the will?" queried McNevin. "It's this way, John. I've never left myself a single penny!" Two D. P.'s who recently arrived on the island met at the small restaurant at Hunter River and had dinner. It happened that one of the side dishes was horse-radish. Hanson popped a spoonful into his mouth. Tears began to roll down his cheeks. His pal, wondering at his sudden emotion, asked, "What is da matter?" "Oh, I was just thinkin' of my poor brooder who died in a prison camp."

His pal tried the horse-radish with the same result. "Vat has happened to you?" asked Hansen. "Oh! I was just thinkin' vat a pity that you was not in your brooder's place!" The first dictionaries were used by the Assyrians to define, not words, but signs. The oldest surviving dictionary is a glossary of Homer's words. It was compiled by an Alexandrian in Augustus' time. Indeed, few books are so pre-eminently for content and style as Homer's "Iliad" and "Odyssey." Mrs. Sarah Wentworth Morton wrote the first American novel.

Title: "The Power of Sympathy." The Bible is still the world's best seller with 2,000,000 copies coming from the presses every year. Of 80,000 each day. No single writer has ever topped this record. Up until the time of George II, English school children used a curious reader, which consisted of a single page on which was written the alphabet, the Roman numerals, the Lord's Prayer. This elementary schoolbook was called the "hornbook." . . . Books that become musty and mildewed should be thoroughly dried out, put out in strong sunshine, and then brushed with spirits of wine, oil of cloves, applied with a soft cloth.
