LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

The Liquor Question.

SIR,—I have read the two letters of your correspondent "A Roman Catholic" with a degree of more than ordinary interest and satisfaction, and I perfectly agree with the writer when he says, "With all due respect to Father Strubbe, I bow with greater deference to the opinions of Bishop McIntyre (whose record on the temperance question is well known) and of his priests who have worthily seconded his efforts to eradicate the vice of intemperance from P. E. Island." The worst that can be said of the Canada Temperance Act is that it is not properly enforced. This certainly is not the fault of the Act, but of those officers charged with its enforcement. The man who sells liquor to-day in Charlottetown is a dishonest man, a lawless man, because the law says: "Thou shalt not sell." Would this be the case under any license system? Certainly not. License simply means open rum shops protected by law.

His Grace Archbishop Ireland, writing to the Catholic World on the centennial of the birth of Father Mathew, which was celebrated throughout the entire Christian world on Friday last, makes use of the following significant language:
"In the centennial of Father Mathew there is a deep significance. It speaks to us in accents that will not be stilled, of our own duty. Intemperance is among us doing fearful harm to bodies and to souls. It has not the unlimited sway which former years accorded to it; there are serried battalions in the field opposing it. Public opinion no longer favors to it; both its victims and its agents are held in ill-repute. Yet, withal, the slimy serpent lives, and through all ranks of society it trails its poison-laden lengths, distilling in all directions its pestilential breathings. Who is there who has not sorrowed over its ravages? Let me speak as a Catholic. I know I will be blamed for my rashness, and credited with unparadiseable exaggerations, and, maybe, with untruths. There are those who fain would veil from public gaze the gaping wounds; there are those who, limiting their observations to their immediate encircling, do not believe in the widespread disasters, the knowledge of which appals me. But speak I will and let me be called, as Theobald Mathew was, a fanatic and a madman. Intemperance power-to-day is doing Holy Church harm beyond the power of pen to describe, and unless we crush it out, Catholicity can make but slow advance in America. I would say: intemperance is our one misfortune. With all other difficulties we can easily cope, and cope successfully. Intemperance, as nothing else, paralyzes our forces, awakens in the minds of non-Catholics violent prejudices against us, and casts over all the priceless treasures of truth and grace which the church carries in her bosom an insupportable veil of darkness. Need I particularize? Catholics nearly monopolize the liquor traffic; Catholics loom up before the criminal courts of the land, under the charge of drunkenness and other violations of law resulting from drunkenness, in undue majorities. Poorhouses and asylums are thronged with Catholics, the immediate or mediate victims of drink; the poverty, the sin, the shame that fall upon our poor people result almost entirely from drink, and God knows, these afflictions come upon them thick and heavy! No one would dare assert, so strong the evidence, that the disgrace from liquor-selling and liquor drinking taken from us, the most hateful enemy could throw a stone at us, or that our people would not come out in broad daylight before the country as the proud, the most law-abiding, the most honored element in its population. And still—mystery, passing strange—the Theobald Mathews are few, and these few are timid. What, as a people, are we doing? We stand almost at the doors of saloons, pelting nicknames at total abstainers, calling them cranks and maniacs. We exhaust our speech in evoking maledictions upon the heads of Protestants and temperance agitators. We philosophize at times, of course, over the evil which we cannot totally conceal from ourselves; but, very strange, the cogitations by which we conceal our do-nothing policy. By opposing intemperance too strongly we might drive men into manichaeism, and, at any rate, we would offend the generous brewer and the jovial-faced bartender, men whose dollars are never held back from the charities of the church. Liquor is the poetry of life; a table without wine or beer looks like a funeral feast; those total abstainers are moody, dangerous men, hypocrites and misers. There is a proper remedy for intemperance, if a remedy is needed. Drunkards will not come to the sacraments, and obligation toward them ends. Thus do we act, thus do we argue, thus do we joke, and meanwhile the Church of Christ droops her head in shame, legions of poor people rot in sin and misery, and immortal souls are precipitated into hell. Oh, for a solemn and enduring awakening from slumber and sloth by virtue of the sacred memory of Father Mathew. Why dilly dally another day with the monster evil which is desolating the land? Why, when the enemy is upon us, slaying neighbors and friends and damning souls, lose a moment in the discussions and heartless pleasantries? For once let us be serious-minded and zealous and active in well-doing."

These noble sentiments, coming from such a distinguished prelate as Archbishop Ireland will, I feel sure, be appreciated by the readers of THE EXAMINER, both Protestant and Catholic.
It may be worthy of remark just here that His Grace Archbishop Ireland is no longer a friend, but a pronounced opponent, of high license.
I beg to subscribe myself,
AN ENGLISH CATHOLIC.

Galloways.

For rugged happiness, the lusty Galloway is the king of beasts. Whether roaming the highland hills, or ranging the lowland prairie, he successfully buffers with his vigorous spirit the hardest of stern conditions. Luxuriantly coated with long and wavy hair, with underclothing of the warmest and softest down, he laughs in hearty bellows at the cold or the sleety storm. Under such a happy circumstance of qualities, it would not be rational reasoning to expect other than the luscious and beautifully marbled beef that is acknowledged to be particularly the Galloway's. The beef eaters of the world know this to be so, and the British markets show that they make good use of their knowledge. The records of the fat stock shows tell a flattering tale, for not a few of the prize carcasses at Chicago and elsewhere had blackskins for winding sheets. The Galloways are not jealous and vain of their merits, but with becoming generosity transmit them to others of lower lineage so fully that it is stated 95 per cent. of their half-blood progeny are black and hornless. As an extensive breeder concisely says of his protégé, "He matures rapidly, is hardy, and is happy."

When the various branches of the Presbyterian church in Canada united in 1875, a proportion of the Church of Scotland adherents did not join the union. A few of these congregations are in Ontario, a few in Quebec, and a number in the Maritime Provinces. At the last meeting of the synod at Pictou, N. S., the question of union with the larger body was brought up, and it was resolved to discuss it at the next annual meeting. The tendency of the day towards union on all sides is very marked.

A Romance in Real Life.

THE QUESTION POSED BY A CABLEGRAM—AND A CONFIDING "YES" PROMPTLY RETURNED.

(From The Empire.)

An incident of an interesting and somewhat romantic nature has arisen out of the visit of the British farmer delegates to Canada. Mr. H. Simmons, of Worthingham, England, found at Moosomin, N. W. T., a bachelor friend of his who has been settled in the territories for some years and has done well. Mr. Simmons was so delighted with the surroundings at Moosomin that he purchased the section of 640 acres adjoining his friend's farm. A daughter of Mr. Simmons is engaged to be married to a young Surrey farmer, the happy event being fixed to take place immediately upon Mr. Simmons return to England. It was the intention of the young couple to proceed to Australia to settle, but Mr. Simmons cabled them of his land purchase, and intimated that he desired his son-in-law to locate upon the property at Moosomin. The reply was promptly flashed back that they would do so. It appears, however, that Mr. Simmons has another unmarried daughter, and the Moosomin man suggested that, to make the little family arrangement complete, this lady should become his wife and the two families would be living side by side. Mr. Simmons confessed that the arrangement would suit him, but he could not speak for the young lady. However, he was urged to send a second message over the cable, conveying the offer of marriage, and a prompt "Yes" came back. The immediate result of Mr. Simmons' visit to Canada, will, therefore, be the settlement of four persons in our magnificent Northwest country, and it may also be the means of turning the attention of hundreds of others Canadianwards.
