CROSS BURNED NEW ORLEANS (AP) — An eight-foot wooden cross soaked with kerosene was burned Friday night on the lawn of the home of a federal district judge. J. Skelly Wright who signed the orders to end segregation on the New Orleans buses. Judge Wright blamed the incident on "just some one looking for publicity." But he added, "I figured it had to be a Ku Klux Klan thing."

ALBERTON Public Library, in an effort to eliminate part of the amount still owing for its construction, is approaching the school districts which make use of its educational facilities, with a request for financial assistance. This approach is being made through the district meeting which will be held tomorrow evening.

This was the first public library on Prince Edward Island to become incorporated and it is among those having the largest circulation of books. Without this library in the area it would be necessary for school districts to purchase many dollars worth of books for use of teachers and pupils. In this way, as well as in providing much interesting and educational reading material for adults, the library is providing a very real service to the public.
