The Pig and His Deserts.

It is commonly said, and the bulk of people take it for granted, that the pig is a dirty, lazy sort of beast, wanting alike in gratitude and decency, imbued with a spirit of contrariness and self-will, and generally unmanageable in conduct. He is also regarded as the lowest in the scale of domesticated animals, of the scavenger and costermonger order, inclining naturally to dirt and to the meanest occupations, uncomely in looks, ungainly in carriage, unclean in taste, unfit for decent surroundings, disposed to unlimited mischief, depraved in morals, and disreputable to a degree. These are the sort of epithets bowled at our porcine quadruped; but, as the man said who "swopped" his old cow for one, "there's many a sweet bit in a pig!"

For the most part, we are inclined to demur to what is commonly said of the pig; and were he a biped, the people who say it would be had up for libel, or defamation of character, or malicious spite, or something of the kind. We admit that he is not fastidious as to food, or the way it is served, and generally loves to "put his foot in it" as he eats it; but there is less trouble with him on this account, for he certainly is not, to speak figuratively, in the habit of mincing matters very much. He is a rough-and-ready sort of being, and can put up with all sorts of inconveniences. He is not in any sense dainty, and is content when his belly is full—no matter what it is full of. The question of "grab" does not bother him much, except as regards enough of it. When his wants are satisfied, he rests longer and sleeps sounder than any domesticated animal we are acquainted with, except Man.
His powers of digestion are unsurpassed; he is seldom troubled with dyspepsia; and the food he eats he is satisfied with, whatever it is, so long as there is enough of it. Peace and plenty are what incline to, but if he has not the latter he disturbs the peace of the neighborhood.]

Admitting, then, that he is rather wanting in delicacy as to food, we deny that he is necessarily dirty in his general habits. It is true that he has not risen very high as yet in the scale of civilization, but this is not altogether his own fault, though it certainly is his misfortune; and who can tell the degree of refinement of which he is susceptible? It is also true that he still has a pugnacity for wallowing in the mire on a hot day, but we have reason to believe that it is for the cool and not for the dirt he seeks it. A few more centuries will get him out of it, and a century does but little to refine even man. Sheep and cats are the cleanest of our domesticated animals, for Nature gave them a start that way, but we demur to pigs being the dirtiest. We simply don't believe it. A horse is clean because he is kept so, and a cow for a similar reason, but we see no special merit in cleanliness of that sort.
A pig will never from choice, or even from carelessness, repose in the muck in his pen; but a horse and a cow have no particular compunction on that score.
A pig if left to his own resources, will always have a clean corner in the sty to lie down in, but a cow and a horse take no precautions of that sort. A pig is punctilious on the score of a dry clean bed, and we have seen him carry straw in his mouth to make it of! Did any one ever see a cow or a horse do such a tidy thing? But a bed is not a thing a pig pines for; he will do very well with a bedstead, so to speak; give him a few bare boards in a corner, and he is as happy—well, as happy as he wants to be.

He pays well for good food and kind treatment, but so far as the latter goes he meets with much neglect; to this, no doubt, is owing the somewhat cold character of his affection for his master or mistress, as the case may be. But he is not by any means incapable of gratitude; wash him to try it, and scrub his hide with a brush! He soon comes to like it, and his grunt of approval is not without music—bass, it may be, but still music, the music of meaning! Feed him well and keep him warm, and he will grow; wash him twice a week, and he will grow the faster still; keep him from overmuch exercise, either of body or mind, and his increase in obesity is surprising! Then, who says pigs have no beauty? Let him look at a litter of young ones, and repent his injustice. A pig is an intensely practical animal, and so is intensely useful. He will not starve if there is anything to eat to be got at, either above the ground or beneath it.
He is not desirable in a garden, or on a lawn, or in an open field for the matter of that. His notions as to the cultivation of the soil are not strictly commendable; yet a lesson in husbandry might be learnt from them, and in any case we may admire the scent and power which reside in his snout.

The time for the slaughtering of the innocents—we mean the pigs—is approaching. It is the time for loud lamentations—on the pigs' side of the question, not on ours. Numbers of them are now being fattened for the household of the farmers, who prefer to do their own "pig-sticking" from October to April, because there is less risk in curing the bacon. Pork, too, of one's own breeding and feeding a dainty dish at any time when it is fresh, is nicer and more fitting in winter than in summer.

Unlike many other kinds of flesh, it should be eaten as soon as may be convenient after the pig's life is out of it. It should be cooked, as is often said of a goose, before it has time to go cold; and, also like a goose, it should be well done.
Underdone pork is—well not quite the thing; in this it differs from beef and mutton.

Sound Advice.

Don't be afraid of killing yourself with overwork, son. Men seldom work so hard as that on the sunny side of thirty. They die sometimes; but it is because they quit work at 6 p. m. and don't get home until 2 a. m. It's the intervals that kill, my son. The work gives you a perfect appetite for your meals; lends solidity to your slumber; it gives you a perfect and grateful appreciation of a holiday. There are young men who do not work, my son; young men who make a living by sucking the end of a cane, and who can tie a neck-tie in eleven different knots, and never lay a wrinkle in it; who can spend more money in a day than you can earn in a month, son; and who will go to the sheriff's to buy a postal card, and apply at the office of the street commissioner for a marriage license.
So find out what you want to be and do, son, and take off your coat and make success in the world. The busier you are the less evil you will be apt to get into, the sweeter will be your sleep, the brighter and happier your holiday and the better satisfied will the world be with you.—Burlington Hawkeye.

A New Mother Shipton.

When lawyers fail to take a fee,
And juries never disagree;
When politicians are content,
And landlords don't collect their rent;
When parties smash all the machines,
And Boston folks give up their beans; When naughty children all die young,
And girls are born without a tongue;
When ladies don't take time to hop,
And office-holders never stop;
When preachers cut their sermons short,
And all folks to the church resort;
When back subscribers all have paid And editors have fortunes made; Such happenings will sure portend This world must soon come to an end.

M. J. de Beinach contributes an alarmist

That the Mormons had a genuine fear of President Garfield's avowed hostility to

The New York "Sun" thinks Mr. Free-winced.
