Along with the five-day 40-hour week, the congress asked time-and-a-half for overtime and double time for work on Sundays and statutory holidays.

Collective bargaining, it said, should be used for settling wages hours and working conditions in the public service, which includes about 163,000 employees of all types working directly for government branches.

The TLC made particular reference to "serious difficulties" in the naval dockyard at Halifax and to "problems" of employees in the post office department.

Civilian workers in the Halifax dockyard are on the "prevailing wage" system, whereby trades workers employed by the government get the going rates in their locality. In Halifax, said Mr. Bengough, the government has the biggest block of workers but uses wage standards of smaller employers.

However, the TLC expressed the hope that a recently-accepted "broader form of national consultation" with the congress may make it possible to "clear away some of the serious difficulties in the Halifax dockyard.

Exclusion of postal workers from the five-day week, the congress said, was "class discrimination which we greatly deplore."

"Employee morale was never lower," it said. "The reputation of the post office publicly is very poor."

Dealing with the collective bargaining question, Mr. St. Laurent said "at this time, when we are approaching the time of a general election, no party would want to say it will do away with the existing civil service system and substitute something else."

Labor Congress

2. With respect to a TLC request for federal aid to primary and secondary education, the government favors equality of education for all but has not yet been able to make its university financial grant acceptable everywhere.

This was a reference to the Quebec government's rejection of these grants in that province.

3. The government is not ready to institute collective bargaining for its employees, though this possibly could come at some future time.

4. Improvement in the postal service, where working conditions were under fire from the TLC, is the aim of a bill that got second reading in the Commons Monday.

Congress postal complaints might be carried to the Commons committee dealing with this measure.

The congress, while endorsing Canada's external policy, took pot shots at the government for its dealings with its own employees and for several aspects of Finance Minister Abbott's recent 1953-54 budget.

Ask Taxation Changes

It called "very strongly" for a "considerable reorientation in taxation policy so that the load will be spread more evenly over the whole population."

Sales taxes of all kinds should be removed, the congress said Personal income tax exemptions—left unchanged in the budget—should be boosted to $3,000 from $2,000 for married persons and to $1,500 from $1,000 for single persons. Family allowance payments should be tax-exempt. Married taxpayers should be given $400 exemption for each child.

The congress was critical of what it called a "discriminatory" action against workers in the budget. This was a provision doubling—to 20 per cent—a tax credit granted on dividends received by taxpayers from Canadian corporations.

The congress also asked tax exemption for the cost of workers' tools and for away-from-home expenses of construction trades workers and seamen.

Four Prospectors Marooned Seven Days on Glacier

VICTORIA, (CP) — Lowering clouds cut an aerial life-line to four copper prospectors in northern British Columbia, forcing them to spend seven icy days on a windswept mountain glacier.

The men staked 72 claims on an ice-covered, 7,000-foot peak known as Leduc Glacier. To win a staking race with another company, they were forced to ration food and sleep seven days in the snow.

Thorn Forrest, oldest of the party at 60, returned Tuesday to tell of the mountain ordeal. He was accompanied in the wind and snow by Tom Williams, Wendel Dawson and Howard Fowler.

Dawson found the copper deposits in 1931 in rugged Alaska - B. C. borderland territory about 135 miles north of Prince Rupert.

Results of the expedition were reported from Prince Rupert during the week-end, but the story began Feb. 15 when a pilot left the four men on the glacier after landing his small seaplane on the snow twice, two men to a trip.

Weather Closes In

Full supplies and the backer of the staking party, Bill Richardson, were to arrive on a third flight. But the weather closed in.

The party was marooned with 10 pounds of meat, a loaf of bread, a pound of tea, four sleeping bags, a small tent and a gasoline stove.

After a night under an overhanging rock, the party staked most of their claims.

By the third day, weather was still bad. Williams, established as leader of the party, decided rationing should be imposed.

The meat, all that remained, was cooked into a soup, each man getting two cups daily.

Getting Really Tough

"It began to get really tough by the afternoon of the third day," Forrest said. "Our sleeping bags were getting soaked and Williams decided we must try for lower ground where there would be some timber."

"We struggled through soft snow on our snowshoes for more than two miles. It was difficult, because we were beginning to get weak."

The men eventually reached timber and set up a second camp, spending three more nights there.

The sky broke on the seventh day and the plane arrived on the glacier together with a long-delayed helicopter, held up at Prince Rupert by weather.

Declares Child Labor Still Exists In Quebec

MONTREAL, (CP) — An official of the Society for the Protection of Women and Children says child labor still exists in Quebec and that the society recently took action against factories employing children as young as 10 years of age.

In a statement issued Tuesday on the 110th anniversary of the passage of the first child-labor law, George Corbett, the society's executive secretary, said the Quebec law on child labor is "more honored in the breach than in the observance."

"Only recently, we had to take action in cases involving close to 200 children down to 10 years of age, employed in factories, chiefly canning factories in the summer time."

In Quebec, children under 16 could not work in regular employment unless they had a certificate of scholarship, adequate to their circumstances, from school authorities and approval from the Quebec labor department.

Queen Mary Runs Household Despite Illness

LONDON, (AP)—Queen Mary is under doctors' care for a stomach ailment, but she insisted on running things as usual at Marlborough House Tuesday even though confined to bed.

Some concern is felt in the Royal Family in view of the Queen's age—she will be 86 in May—but her condition is not regarded as critical.

She was visited Tuesday night by two physicians after which a statement was issued: "Her Majesty had a comfortable day, and her general condition remains unchanged."

A member of the household said she dealt with correspondence and personal papers from her bed Tuesday.

The Queen has been bothered for some time with a gastric ailment and was stricken again eight days ago. Marlborough House, where she lives, announced this to quell rumors she was seriously ill. These were heard when it was noticed she failed to go for her usual automobile drives.

Queen Mary, long a respected symbol of British royalty and mother of two kings, carries her age well. She has had to curtail her activities considerably, however, since suffering a severe attack of bronchitis last Autumn.
