Ministerial Power Invoked To Reopen Ont. Arson Case

OTTAWA (CP) — Justice Minister — Fleming has invoked a ministerial power rarely used in Canadian history to reopen the case of Robert Roberts of Toronto, sentenced to 24 years in prison on nine counts of arson.

Mr. Fleming told a press conference that documents would be filed in Ontario Appeal Court in Toronto have the court hear the both convictions and sentences on each of the charges.

This is the same court which on June 22 rejected Roberts' appeal against sentence, without giving reasons.

Mr. Fleming's decision leaves it open for the Appeal Court to take any moves that would have been open to it had the two-way appeal been made in the first place. It could order a new trial, or alter the convictions or sentences itself.

WERE MANY PLEAS

The minister's action follows pleas by 10 Toronto lawyers and hundreds of citizens that he use "the mercy of the Crown" to intervene in the case.

The lawyers contended Roberts did not get a fair trial, was not convicted according to law; that the proceedings before Magistrate S. Tupper Bigelow contravened the Canadian Bill of Rights; and that both the magistrate and Appeal Court failed to consider available evidence concerning the fitness of sentence.

Mr. Fleming said he made his decision after thorough study of the case and after consultation with both Ontario Attorney-General Kelso Roberts and Toronto lawyer Arthur Maloney.

He took the action under section 596 (B) of the Criminal Code. It says that on anyone's application for Crown mercy, the minister can "refer the matter at any time to the Court of Appeal for hearing and determination by that court as if it were an appeal by the convicted person."

The last time this power was used was in the Wilbur Coffin case in January, 1956. A special reference by then Justice Minister Garson to the Supreme Court of Canada was rejected and Coffin was hanged for the slaying of an American hunter in the Gaspe region of Quebec.

ASSUMED NAME

Robert Roberts is an assumed name — assumed by the press, rather than the courts. Mr. Fleming declined to reveal the accused's real name, saying he preferred to follow the public practice so far of using Robert Roberts. This did not mean the man's real name would not be used in the legal proceedings.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♥	4 ♠	4 ♥	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead — ace of diamonds.

This hand, reported in The Bridge World magazine, occurred in a tournament. North had a difficult choice of bids to make over four diamonds and decided in favor of four hearts, despite his holding of only two trumps. He didn't like the idea of being talked out of a vulnerable game.

West led the ace of diamonds and continued with the queen. Declarer played the king from dummy and East ruffed. East returned a spade. Declarer finessed, losing the queen to the king. It was the third trick for the defense. South later attempted a club finesse, which also lost, and the result was that South ended going down one.

North was properly sympathetic. "There wasn't anything you could do about it," he said. "You lost two finesses. East had to have a singleton diamond, and besides, West had to find the diamond lead to beat the hand.

"I guess I should have doubled four diamonds. We would have gotten them for three tricks."

When North had finished, East delicately pointed out that South could have made the contract. He said South should have ducked the queen of diamonds at trick two, since it was obvious on the bidding that East would trump the king if it was played.

The defense would then be unable to stop the contract. If East discarded on the queen and West continued with a diamond, East could ruff, but declarer would overruff, draw trumps, and finesse the club to make the hand. His spade queen would go on dummy's fourth club.

Nor would it help East to trump the queen of diamonds, because declarer, in that case, would be able to discard the queen of spades on the king of diamonds. South would lose two diamonds and a club on this line of defense.

North had listened closely to East's analysis of the play, which was obviously correct, and when East was all through, he turned to South and snapped, "Well, why didn't you play it that way?"

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X E
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
