Prickings From The Past

By CAPTAIN A. C. POLLARD

Would he remember? Walter Herman weighed the question for the hundredth time as he sat in his room.

Not that it mattered very much. It happened so very long ago, three years before the war, and even though his conscience might still be uneasy, his record was quite clean. Well, clean enough.

Anyhow, Martin Archer was dead. If the truth had been going to come out, it would have come out before this.

He looked round the vestibule of the West End Club, where he had been left waiting. It would be funny seeing Lord Kyle again. He would have got out of it if he could, but the Corporation had insisted.

The dignified Lord Porter approached with measured tread. "His Lordship is in the smoking room, sir. If you will come this way?"

Unconsciously Herman squared his shoulders as he followed his guide. His mouth was curious dry. He felt for all the world as though he were going before the Boss for a wigging, as in the days when he and Archer had been fellow employees in the firm of which Lord Kyle—then plain Mister—was the Managing Director.

It was ridiculous, he told himself. He had got on since then; was now a self-made man, worth thousands, and with a business of his own. Actually, he was considerably richer than the man he was about to interview.

There was nothing whatever to fear. Besides, Lord Kyle had a notoriously bad memory. All the newspapers had commented on it at some time or another.

The smoking room was almost deserted when he was ushered in to it. But he did not need to have the tall, white-haired figure seated by the bow window pointed out to him. Though he had aged considerably, he knew him at once.

But there was no recognition in Lord Kyle's eyes as he rose to greet his visitor.

"Mr. Walter Herman?" he queried. "Take a seat, Mr. Herman. What can I have the pleasure of doing for you?"

A wave of relief surged through Herman as he sank into the chair indicated. It was succeeded a moment later by a vague feeling of annoyance. He would feel uncomfortable if Lord Kyle connected him with that Archer episode, but it was humiliating to be forgotten altogether. If detracted somehow from his success.

He cleared his throat. "I thought it better to see you in person instead of writing, sir—my lord it's like this, you see. We want to ask a favour of you."

The white bushy eyebrows went up. "We?"

"Yes, sir. The Barrowleigh Town Corporation. I represent them. I'm the Mayor of Barrowleigh."

"Barrowleigh. Ah, yes. Quite so." "We've just laid out an aerodrome," went on Herman proudly. "I always believe in keeping up with the times. Now they've got these Air Malls running, or flying, I suppose I should say. A town's got to be prepared, I always say. If you're not ready, you slip behind and—"

"And where do I come in?" interrupted his Lordship, foreseeing a long and rambling speech.

"We want to know whether you would be so kind as to come down and open it for us," explained Herman.

"Lord Kyle laughed gently. "Your invitation is very flattering, Mr. Mayor. But why am I to have the honor?"

"Well, sir—my lord. You're the Chairman of Rural Air Services and we thought—we hoped, that is—if you took an interest in our scheme, may be your Company

PIMPLE VICTIM'S TRUE STORY

Here's a remarkable tribute to Outcours from one who suffered from externally caused pimples, telling how to obtain quick relief.

"Pimples left large blotches that would irritate me, also burn, and disfigure my face terribly. It took only a few days of Outcours Soap and I'm of Outcours Ointment to bring complete relief!"

THE FOLLY OF GUESSING

The "eye-guesser" is everywhere. Men and women guess. Children do not bother to do even that. Many guess their eyes need attention, many more that they DON'T. The former guess is more likely to be true. FACTS are easily obtained, and should be secured by everyone who is not sure of his vision.

late to take the pretty hundred pounds from the safe. The detective who investigated the crime made his arrest without the slightest hesitation.

Herman had built his fortune on that 100 pounds capital. Without it he could never have made a start. Now his industry and unscrupulousness had multiplied it nearly a thousandfold.

He spent a night of nerve-wracked wakefulness. If Archer had given him away, and Kyle remembered, he would have to face the consequences of his act after all these years.

It was not that he feared a trial. They would never be able to prove anything. It was the disgrace he could not face; the ridicule of the crowd. He could imagine them laughing at him, talking about him in the pubs. Setting himself up as Mayor and a leader of the town-folk when all the time he was a thief. Margaret would know the truth, too, and despise him. He would never be able to live it down.

The following morning he rang up Lord Kyle's house. The suave voice of a secretary answered him. Yes, Lord Kyle was on the point of leaving for the County.

Herman swallowed in agitation. There was just a possibility that his Lordship's notorious memory might have caused him to forget his promise.

"I'm the Mayor of Barrowleigh. Did he—did he say anything about a letter?"

"Yes, certainly. He's written something for you in his own handwriting."

Herman winced. His hand clenched on the receiver. "Could I—mean, if I come up I suppose I can fetch it?"

"Oh, no." There was a distinct note of surprise in the level voice. "My instructions are perfectly clear. I'm to keep it until next Thursday and then send it to your new aerodrome by one of our own aircraft."

Herman muttered something and rang off. He was shaking like a leaf. He had intended asking to speak to his Lordship but his courage failed him. It would be no use anyway.

The week intervening before the ceremony was a continual nightmare. He went from hope to despair; from wild imaginings to logical reason. It was ridiculous to suppose that a man in Lord Kyle's position would play a trick on him.

Then he remembered that, when younger, Kyle had a sardonic humour which expressed itself in biting satire.

It was the uncertainty that worried. He did not feel well. He was not well. Margaret insisted that he should see his doctor. The doctor thought he was exciting himself over his civic duties and advised rest. Rest was impossible.

The day arrived. With his chain of office hanging heavy on his shoulders he drove to the new landing ground. The crowd applauded him.

He raised his hat. His face was set in a stiff smile. If only they knew. Fool that he was to have agreed to Kyle being approached. Idiot to have mentioned Huckle and Griggs.

He took his place on the raised platform; listened to the demure talk and laughter going on around him. He felt dizzy and closed his eyes. The noise merged to a hum.

"Your trip to town has been too much for you, Walter. Why don't you leave these arrangements to some of the others? You know the doctor warned you to take things easily with that heart of yours."

Herman uttered an exclamation of petulance. "Oh, do leave me alone, Margaret. I know my own business best."

Margaret sighed. Her remark had been prompted more by duty than affection. He had killed that long ago with his dictatorial overbearing ways. There had never been any love. Her heart had turned to stone three years before the war.

She had always hoped to marry Martin Archer. When he was disgraced she would still have stuck to him, but her parents forbade her to think any more about him. Two years in prison is a long time. When he came out she was married to Walter.

Walter was so helpful and sympathetic whilst they were engaged. He seemed such a true friend to the man who had made a mistake, finding excuses for him whilst he ingratiated himself with the girl whose heart was broken.

Only Herman knew that Archer was innocent; that it was he and not his friend who should have stood in the dock. He had managed things so very cleverly, chosen a night when Archer was working

THE END

New Glasgow

Mr. Remton McCoubrey, left last week for Sydney, C. B. where a position awaited him. His many friends wish him every success in his new surroundings.

Mrs. Walton Houston, Farmfield, Sask., is the welcome guest of her mother, Mrs. Caroline Moffatt, Mayfield.

Mr. Jack Connolly, Charlottetown, was a visitor to New Glasgow Tuesday.

The Misses Francis and Violet Sweeney, Joan Walker, and Dorothy Ward, Kenville, N.S., are enjoying a pleasant stay at Hunter River.

Mr. and Mrs. Luther Moffatt, accompanied by the latter's sister, Mrs. Bell Skinner, Sydney, C. B., spent the week-end with relatives at Mayfield and New Glasgow.

The "Wide Awake" Group were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Ling on Wednesday evening, June 2nd with eleven members and two visitors present.

The Vice-President, Mr. George Nisbet, was in the chair. The meeting opened by singing a hymn, and repeating the Lord's Prayer in unison. Scripture reading I Timothy, Chapter 3, read responsively, led by Miss Lois McDonald.

An interesting lesson on "The Teacher's Qualifications" was taught by Miss Ella Semple. The Secretary's report was heard and approved. A motion to the effect that Mrs. Howard Ling and Miss Ella Semple would be the committee to divide the Group funds was seconded and carried.

A short discussion on the Autograph Quilt then followed, it was decided to finish some during the summer months. The next meeting will be in the form of a social evening held at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Harold Mellish, Hunter River. The refreshment committee will be Mrs. Mellish and Miss Lois McDonald.

The devotional and business period closed by singing "Just As I Am," and repeating the Mispah" Benediction. The Organist for the evening was Miss Margaret Ross. The program committee then took charge and some interesting contests and games were enjoyed.

A cast from the Cavendish Young People's Group, put on their sacred drama "Christ Offering" on Sunday evening last in the New Glasgow United Church, under the auspices of the Women's Missionary Society. The meeting was presided over by the President, Mrs. R. H. Binns and opened by singing the "Doxology" a hymn and the 103 Psalm in unison. Solo, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go" was very effectively rendered by Mrs. Luther Moffatt of Sydney, N.S.

"Will you Anchor Hold." The offering was then received and this was followed by a solo "The Church By the Side of the Road" by Mr. Richard Dickson. Miss Annie Lowther read the Scripture which was in keeping with the Drama, and Mrs. W. A. Patterson introduced the following cast, Jephthah—Elmore McKay; Judith—Anita Webb; Ruth—Annie Lowther; Martha—Dorothy Toombs; Ashael—Eimer Fyfe; Messenger—Eric Simpson. The meeting was brought to a close by singing "Saviour breathe an evening blessing."

The Ninth District Convention of The Women's Institutes was held in Cavendish Hall on June 16th 1936. The President, Miss Martha M. Brown presided and the meeting opened by singing the Institute Ode and repeating the Creed. Mrs. Allan Wyand gave the address of welcome to which Mrs. James Stevenson, of Anglo-Rustico responded. The minutes of the previous Convention were then read and splendid reports from the different Institutes were given: Miss Lucy Woolner reporting for Avonlea; Mrs. Davis Moffatt reporting for Mayfield; Mrs. John MacGulgan reporting for Stanley Bridge; Miss Irene Wyand reporting for Bay View; Mrs. Peter Doiron reporting for Toronto Road; Mrs. Edgson Rolings reporting for Anglo-Rustico. The Supervisor, Miss F. Jean Rodd, gave a very helpful talk on Institute work; the need of study clubs for young people, and how we as Institute members may aid in the up-lifting of the future citizenship of our Province.

Mrs. Frank Houston gave an original reading entitled "The Ability to Make Quick Decisions" this number was particularly inspiring and received a great applause. A demonstration on "The Uses of Paper" by Miss Hazard, carried many interesting ideas. A most enjoyable demonstration, "A little bit of color in the home" was given by Mrs. (Rev.) W. A. Patterson, showing how many articles that otherwise would be discarded, could, by a little touch of color be converted into a thing of beauty.

Mrs. Allan Wyand reviewed the work being done by the Dental Clinic, and stressed the need of the Institutes taking advantage of this forward movement and giving assistance to same. Mrs. Wyand was highly commended by the President and others for her efforts in behalf of this project. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year. President, Mrs. M. McLeod, Vice-President Mrs. Peter Doiron, Secretary-Treasurer Miss M. M. Brown, Mrs. (Rev.) W. A. Patterson, Mrs. John MacGulgan, Mrs. James Stevenson, were appointed on the Resolution Committee. The place of next District Convention to be decided at meeting of Provincial Conventions. Meeting then closed with the National Anthem. Supper was served and a social hour enjoyed, with Question Box, discussing many puzzling questions.

At the afternoon session, Mrs. M. Doyle acted as Secretary in place of Mrs. M. McLeod who was absent. The following program was rendered at the evening meeting. Instrumental music, Dorothy and James Warren (encored); Reading by Miss Dorothy Toombs (encored); Dialogue by Anglo-Rustico Institute; Solo, Mrs. (Dr.) J. E. Fleming (encored); Reading, Miss Margaret Woolner (encored); An address on "Good Literature" by
