

Famous British Race Horse Trainer Dies

BECKHAMPTON, Eng., (CP) — Fred Darling, 69, one of Britain's greatest race horse trainers, died at his home here Tuesday, three days after his final triumph, Pinza, a horse which he had bred, romped home Saturday four lengths ahead of the Queen's Aureole to win the Derby.

Darling, known throughout the sports world as the "Beckhampton wizard," trained seven Derby winners and a herd of other top prize horses.

In a career of nearly 35 years, Darling trained for most of the turf's leading owners, including King George VI.

Queen's Entry Runs Second In Derby At Epsom

The Queen's colt, Aureole, one of the two favorites in the famous Derby, came second at Epsom Downs. Last Saturday the colt pleased the sport experts by winning the Derby Trial Stakes run over the same distance as the Epsom Derby.

Strange But True

By F. H. MacArthur

Most of us have to dig hard to make a living. This was not the case with Silas Brown one of Marshfield's pioneer farmers. Brown was not the fellow's real name, but for obvious reasons I'm calling him by that name.

Brown owned a shore farm, and people said that a group of deported French Acadians had buried their gold there rather than have it fall into the hands of the British. One day Brown and his hired man set themselves to the task of stumping a piece of new land that reached right down to the shore. The axe that Brown was wielding struck against something that gave forth a metallic ring. Both men stopped work to look inquiringly into each other's face.

Brown was the first to speak. He told his helper he wouldn't be needing him any longer. But instead of going home the fellow concealed himself in a clump of bushes and actually saw his former boss dig up some half dozen iron pots. When Brown had rested from his labors he plucked the lids from the pots and let handfuls of glittering gold pieces spill through his fingers.

One week later Brown sold his property and went to the United States where he retired on the fortune he'd gleaned from the shore at Marshfield.
