"What's going on?" asked my sister Mou, who had just awoken.

"Nothing," I replied,

"just mosquitos." Had I informed her that the mattress on the floor was being invaded by roaches, our chances of sleep would have been abolished.

The experience was not futile. We discovered that night that all five of us could fit into a double bed. •

The Island

What does the Island

Mean to you?

Is it white sandy beaches,

Or a bowl of your mother's homemade stew?

Is it Anne of Green Gables

And the Charlottetown Festival;

Or is it going to the movies,

And seeing life extraterrestrial?

Is it bright red soil

On a warm summer day;

Or waking up after a storm,

And shovelling out your driveway?

Is it meeting people

From far, far away;

Or getting to know the person

Who lives just across the highway?

Is it fast, fast cars

And tearing up the road;

Or a wandering path,

Beckoning you to tales of old?

Maybe it's the local church,

Or the little red schoolhouse;

Or perhaps it's a man going through life,

And having the same spouse.

But what does the Island mean to me, you say?

Well, I have only one answer to shout:

In the face of trials and hardships;

In the face of adversity and strife;

Its people have only to remember that they are Islanders,

And everything will turn out all right.
