Obituary.

A correspondent writes: A sad event took place at Kelly's Cross, Lot 29, on Friday, May 8th, when Death claimed as its victim Miss Katie Keegan, at the early age of eighteen years. Ten days previous she was in her usual health, and thought, undoubtedly, no more of death than those with whom she mingled—whom she cheered by her presence. But having contracted a cold, it turned to inflammation of the lungs and terminated fatally. Although assured by her physician (Dr. Robertson; Crapaud) of the hopelessness of her case, still her friends, buoyed up by love and hope, could not realize that her pure spirit would forsake them and leave them so bereaved. But God's will has been accomplished. Her funeral took place to St. Joseph's Church, Kelly's Cross, on Sunday afternoon, and was largely attended, showing the respect with which she was regarded by the surrounding community. Requiescat in pace. Amen.

Oh! why have you left us, dear Katie? Shall we gaze on thy face nevermore? That face never marred by stern anger, Now brighter on heaven's bright shore.

We know that thy soul is now happy, Enjoying the glories above; Look, then, down to us you've forsaken, Who cherish your memory in love.

Ah, yes! we shall one day behold thee More beautiful and loving than here, And enjoy our Heavenly Creator, Whom on earth we adore and revere.

We will visit thy grave in St. Joseph's, And will guard it and keep it so green; On it we'll strew flowers, dear Katie— No prettier grave shall be seen.

'Tis hard, very trying, to part thee, Our hearts are saddened and sore, But we know that thy spirit will aid us To meet on the glad, 'ternal shore.

Feeding Horses.

There is no subject relating to the management of live stock which has received so little attention on the part of our agricultural friends as that of feeding horses, although there is no subject probably relating to farmers' interests that is more important. It may be that there is less room for variation in feeding horses than with most other kinds of stock, owing to the sameness of the uses to which they are put; but notwithstanding it must surely be true that the horses of a continent may have some variation in the rations given them without producing results that are unsatisfactory. In other words, a greater variety of food may be given to at least our young horses and brood mares than they are getting now, and a greater variety may be adopted in the mode of giving it.

The usual method of feeding working horses is somewhat as follows. They get a certain amount of grain, generally oats, which is given to them directly, and along with this a certain amount of long hay, usually given in three feeds; occasionally they get a bran mash to assist in regulating digestion. About the same mode of feeding is adopted with brood mares and young horses, with the difference that the quantity of oats and bran fed is lessened or dispensed with altogether. With a majority of farmers no better facilities for feeding are at hand. The system has been found to work fairly well when due attention has been given to the quantity and the quality of the feed, but in regard to young horses and brood mares, the day is certainly coming when it can be improved upon. Mortality among foals has been proportionately larger than with the young of other animals. This proceeds from some cause, whatever this cause may be. Much has been written on the subject, and many are of the opinion that it generally arises from the sluggish habits of the dam during the winter season. This may be and doubtless is a partial explanation, but it is not a sufficient one, for it should be borne in mind that the relative losses in young foals is not so great in summer as in winter or spring, even when the dam is moderately worked in winter. This would seem to indicate that the condition of the system of the dams had much to do with the result. When out on grass the bowels become relaxed, and that heated condition of the blood which arises from feeding a dry and stimulating diet in winter becomes speedily modified. The only laxative food given to the dam in winter is bran, which, by the way is very good, but not so good as if a portion of the diet consisted of corn ensilage. The same is true of a ration for young colts. The ensilage gives that tone to the digestion which cannot so easily or so cheaply be effected in any other way. In this we find an additional argument for the building of silos.

In the meantime, however, something more may be done where we have no silos. Carrots, which are now fed by many, can be fed by a much larger number, if they will only grow them, and are an excellent article of diet in giving tone to young horses. Where the food can be cut before feeding some improvement may be made in preparing it. The importance of the subject demands that more be done at our agricultural experiment stations by way of experiment in the line of feeding horses.
Mr. W. C. Edwards, M. P., of Rockland, Ont., has introduced a system of feeding horses which, in practice has been found to work very well. It is substantially as follows: The hay is cut and put into a box, the oats are ground and spread over this, and bran is added. The whole is then mixed and water is applied until the mass is saturated; it is then allowed to stand for twelve hours and is then divided per day. The amount of ground grain is increased or lessened according to the object sought. This ration is given to colts, brood mares, and working horses. As the colts advance in age some dry oats is given to them, and the work horses get a dry grain ration at noon. For horses that are to be driven fast and long distances, not more than one feed of the mixture should be given during the day. Mr. Edwards is quite satisfied that this ration is a very economical one, and he has tried it now for several years. The distinctive feature of this system is the amount of water applied. It has been frequently recommended to moisten cut food given to horses, but we seldom find it recommended to saturate it with water, and then allow it to undergo a sort of mild fermentation. This, however, Mr. Edwards has tried. It has got beyond the domain of theory with him, for he is so satisfied regarding the advantages of the system that he would practice it with all the horses used at many points in connection with his very large lumbering business if it were practicable. The results have been most marked in the development of the young horses.

What to Teach Girls.

Give your girls a thorough education. Teach them to cook and prepare the food of the household.

Teach them to wash, to iron, to darn stockings, to sew on buttons and to make their own dresses.

Teach them to spend within their income.

Teach them to wear a calico that is paid for with more comfort than a silk one which is still owing.

Teach them how to purchase and see that the account tally with the purchase.

Teach them that good health and a bright face is better than any costume.

Teach them good common sense, self help and industry.

Teach them that marrying a man without principle is like putting to sea without a compass or rudder.

Teach them, if you can afford it, music, painting and other accomplishments, but insist on a certain amount of good reading daily. In reading there is development, and often a lace.

The woman who does not read enough will certainly gossip enough. Teach them to mind their own business, and to avoid gossiping as they would an infectious disease. A gossip is a perverted mind.

Finally, teach that matrimonial happiness depends not on wealth, not on appearance, but on personal character.

News Notes.

Careful measurements made at different points of Europe shows that the earth wobbles upon her axis. This causes a very slight change of latitude for places at different times. The north pole may not always be at the same fixed spot, but may vary a half millionth part of a mile from time to time. Maybe the old world is getting tired of spinning around and around so many millions of years, and is getting shaky upon her centre pins. The scientific men say the variation is "probably" owing to some changes in the internal mass of the planet, disturbances in her insides, in other words. Well, she has carried enough upon her surface in the long centuries, heavens knows, to disgust her and make her very sick, indeed.

Speaking of the relations between Mr. Parnell and the opponents of Home Rule, the London Telegraph, a Tory paper, says: "As to the Unionist feeling toward Mr. Parnell, it exactly corresponds to the sentiment which a general entertains towards a mutineer in the enemy's camp. He may detest the man, but he is glad to hear of his success because it paralyzes the foe. Were Mr. McCarthy the leader of the weaker section of Irish nationalists we should regard him with equal interest, but now our eyes follow the man who divides and weakens the separatist cause by leading away a party of his own from the main body of the Irish forces." This frank avowal of the reasons which prompt the Salisbury-Balfour party to encourage the Parnellite schism is not likely to hurt Mr. McCarthy and his friends, or to help Mr. Parnell, in Ireland.
