HIS RHYTHMIC FLOW

WAGG MAKES A TRIAL OF THE YOGI METHOD OF BECOMING A GENIUS.

His Wife Witnessed Portions of the Experiment and Was Frightened—First She Suggested the Hot Water Bag, but Finally Sent For the Doctor.

Mr. Wagg, after the fashion of the "Didd" in "Animal Land," which "roars and roars and eats caramels," writes jokes and poems during business hours and gives up his leisure moments on Sunday to The Sun and philosophical experiments. If Mrs. Wagg had read The Sun one Sunday morning recently, she might have been saved from some alarming suspicions about Wagg during the day. She saw Wagg read and then reread one article in it several times.

"That has long been my theory," he exclaimed as he laid down the paper, and Mrs. Wagg, supposing that he referred to a new scheme for currency reform or something equally uninteresting to her, did not question him, but went about her household duties. An hour later she found Wagg in his study staring straight ahead.

"Are you ill?" she asked anxiously. "Hush, please, and don't destroy my rhythm," said Wagg calmly.

Mrs. Wagg supposed that a poem was taking shape in her husband's mind, and she retreated. When she again looked in on Wagg, he was sitting in the same chair, but one nostril was stopped with cotton, and he held his watch before him. "I am sure you are ill," said Mrs. Wagg.

"No, no," said Wagg in an absentminded fashion. "I'm just experimenting with my rhythm. That's all, really."

Two hours later Mrs. Wagg went up to see her husband and found him in the same attitude, but his other nostril was now closed with cotton. Wagg's expression was intense. His wife began to have fears of his sanity, and she stole softly out of the room.

When luncheon time came, Wagg responded to the summons, as usual, but his wife noticed that he was absentminded and that his appetite was not good. Immediately after luncheon Wagg retired to his library, and there his wife found him holding a feather first on one nostril and then on the other. His watch was open on the table before him, and he looked worried.

"Now, James," she said, "I am sure you are not well. Let me get a hot water bag and—"

"It's nothing, my dear, but those d—d Yogis. I beg your pardon, but they are enough to make a man swear."

"I hope they are not contagious, James, for we must remember the children, you know."

"Now, according to them," continued Wagg, as if he had not heard his wife, "they have a breathing exercise that enables them to reach a much higher state of psychic action. That sounds plausible."

"Hadn't I better get the hot water bag?" suggested Mrs. Wagg.

"Now, when we force the breath," continued Wagg, breathing hard, "we increase the rhythmic nervous flow and consequently the reaction in the brain cells."

Wagg continued to breathe hard for five minutes, and Mrs. Wagg watched him anxiously.

"That sounds fair," he said, breaking the silence, "but I can't get any reaction. Now, here is another. This Yogi says to begin the exercise by closing the right nostril with the thumb and slowly inhaling for four seconds through the left nostril. (Wagg here followed directions.) "Imagine while doing this that you are sending a current down the spinal cord." Now, I can't do that. Either my imagination is at fault or my spinal cord is."

"Won't you try the hot water bag, please, James?" interrupted Mrs. Wagg. Wagg was lost in thought.

"In a perfectly well person," continued Wagg, "the breath changes from one nostril to the other every two hours, but in poor health the breath sometimes remains in one nostril for hours. Three hours ago I breathed out of my right nostril. I still breathe out of my right nostril. Consequently my health isn't good."

"I know it," said Mrs. Wagg, and out she hurried for her maid.

"Mr. Wagg is unwell," she said to the girl, "and I want you to go to Dr. Jones and leave word for him to call as soon as he comes in."

The maid hurried out, and Mrs. Wagg, who believes in self control, sat down to quiet her nerves for the doctor's verdict. She suspected that Wagg's disorder was purely mental. Then her eyes happened to fall on the paper that she had been reading and this headline attracted her attention: "How to become a genius. Swami Abhedananda gives some infallible rules. Anybody can do it by practicing a few breathing and mental exercises regularly until he sets up a rhythmic flow of nervous currents. Bad men who do it become insane." She looked puzzled for a moment, and then as she glanced quickly down the column a smile appeared, it broadened, and then with the full appreciation of the situation she leaned back in the chair and laughed until she cried.

"Oh, James, James!" she exclaimed to herself. "Studying how to become a genius! Why, you are a genius now. Anyway it says that it is dangerous only to bad men, and you are safe."

Just as Mrs. Wagg arrived at this conclusion in came the maid with Dr. Jones. "So sorry to trouble you, doctor," said Mrs. Wagg, "and it was all a mistake. Baby was coughing and I thought that it was croup. It wasn't, though. Yes. Good afternoon. It is a beautiful day, I'm sure."

When Mrs. Wagg walked into the library, Wagg remarked: "This Yogi business is all nonsense." "It is indeed, James," was her reply. P. S.—This is a true story.—New York Sun.

Old California.
An American geography, published in 1812, contains the following interesting information: "California is a wild and almost unknown land, covered throughout the year by dense fogs, as damp as they are unhealthful. On the northern shores live anthropophagi, and in the interior are active volcanoes and vast plains of shifting snow, which sometimes shoot up columns to inconceivable heights." The book adds that some of these statements would seem incredible were they not so well authenticated by trustworthy travelers.

The Thanksgiving proclamation was originated by Sir Francis Bernard, captain general and governor in chief in and over his majesty's province of Massachusetts Bay. It was issued Nov. 4, 1767, and the form then used has been substantially adhered to ever since.

The Caymans in the West Indies export nothing but turtles.

A PRIVATE DETECTIVE

After a Government Official

We are in the Dairy Supply business to-day, notwithstanding the unfair competition of an official whose travelling expenses are paid out of the public funds. We pay our own, and will compete with any of the Quebec houses thus represented, for quality of workmanship in cheese vats, cream vats, either single or duplex, portable or stationary, tempering or receiving vats, and all other Dairy Supplies in stock or to order at short notice.

We have on hand Alpha Separators which return more money to the patrons than any other. Separator oil that will insure safer running at extreme speed than any other on the market.

Butter Boxes for storing and shipping butter in. Dairy plants that will run without an expert engineer on hand.

Boilers that will save fuel over any other that has been imported so far. Engines that do not require to be driven to extreme speed to obtain enough power. All work warranted for one year.
