POETRY.

WINTER FRIENDS.

Some little sparrows under a tree,
Were chattering together:
Said one of them, "It seems to me
We'll soon have falling weather.
I wouldn't feel the least surprise
If I should hear it thunder."
"Well, you're extremely weather-wise,"
An old one said: "I wonder
Where you were hatched, and when, my dear,
To talk of that this time of year!

It's much more likely, let me say,
Although it's to my sorrow,
That you will see it snow to-day—
At all events to-morrow."
He hopped off to another twig,
When he had thus admonished
His neighbors not so wise and big,
And left them quite astonished
"What does he mean? and what is snow?"
They asked each other: Do you know?"

And not a single one could tell;
So after lots of chatter,
They all concluded, very well,
'Twas no such mighty matter.
But in the night-time came the snow,
According to his warning;
And oh! what flying to and fro
And twittering next morning!
"How cold it is," they chirped—"O dear!
How disagreeable and queer!"

The old one swelled with self-conceit;
"I told you so," he muttered,
"Now see what you will find to eat,"
And off again he fluttered.
The little sparrows, in despair,
They looked at one another—
"Oh! where is all the seed, and where
The bugs and worms, my brother?
To die of hunger, that's a fate
One shudders but to contemplate.

Now, in the house behind the tree,
There was a little maiden,
Who laughed out merrily to see
The branches all snow laden.
She broke her bread up crumb by crumb,
Along the sill so narrow
And called, "Dear little birdies, come!
Here's some for ev'ry sparrow,
I'll feed you darlings, every day,
Because you never fly away."

"The blue-bird and the boholink,
They're birds of gayer feather,
But not so nice as you, I think,
That stay in winter weather.
So hop along the window sill,
There's food enough for twenty;
Come every day and eat your fill,
You'll always find a plenty."
And after that, come frost or snow,
Be sure the birds knew where to go.

PROGRESS.

How beautifully has the Quaker poet, Whittier, expressed the mighty march of events—the lightning-like progress of the age—

Behind the squaw's light birch canoe,
The steamer rocks and raves;
And city lots are staked for sale
Above old Indian graves.
I heard the tread of pioneers—
Of nations yet to be—
The first low wash of waves were soon
Shall roam a human sea,
The rudiments of Empire here
Are plastic yet and warm;
The chaos of a mighty world
Is rounding into form.

LITERATURE.

A NEWSPAPER ADVERTISMENT.

Some years ago, a Quaker knight of the shears and thimble, who exercised his avocation in Canterberry, was imposed upon by an adroit scoundrel, who contrived to get a suit of clothes on credit, and afterwards decamped without paying for them. The Quaker was too poor to lose the debt; but like too many others of his cloth, he had apparently no alternative. The account was put on his books and soon forgotten. About five years afterwards he was examining his old record of debt, profit and loss, when his attention was drawn to this account, and all the circumstances came fresh to his mind. Suddenly an odd thought suggest itself.

He immediately prepared an advertisment in substance as follows, which he inserted in he Kent 'Herald.'

'If Mr. Henry Warran, who was in Canterberry about the month of August, in the year 1852, will send his address to the editor of this paper he will hear something to advantage.'

Having instructed the editor not to disclose his name to the rogue, if he should call, but to request the other to leave his address, the Quaker patiently awaited the result of his experiment. In a short time he was informed a note from the editor that the individual alluded to in the advertisement having arrived from London, might be found at the Rose hotel.'

The tailor lost no time in preparing a transcript from his account, not forgetting to charge interest from the time the debt was incurred. Taking a bailiff with him, who bore a legal process suited to the occasion, he soon arrived at the lodgings of the swindler. The bailiff was instructed to stand off at a little distance till the signal should indicate the time for him to approach.

The Quaker now entered the office room and rang the bell; and when the servant appeared, requested him to inform the gentleman of whom he was in search that a friend wanted to see him. The waiter obeyed the summons, and soon debtor and creditor were standing face to face.

How dost thou do? kindly inquired the Quaker in a bland tone. Perhaps thou dost not know me?

I believe that I have not had the pleasure of your acquaintance, politely answered our hero with a forced smile.

Dost thou remember purchasing a suit of clothes several years ago from a poor tailor in this city, and forgetting to pay for them? asked the Quaker.

Oh no! said the gentleman, blushing slightly; you must be mistaken in the person. It cannot possibly be me you wish to find.

But the Quaker was not to be shaken off by this denial of his debtor's identity.

Ah! John, I know thee well. Thou art the very man I wish to see. Thou hast on this very moment the very waistcoat that I made for thee. Thou must acknowledge that it was good stuff and well made, or it could not have lasted so long.

Oh yes, said the gentleman appearing suddenly to recollect himself; I do remember now the circumstance to which you allude. Yes, yes—I intended to call and settle that little bill before leaving Canterberry, and you may depend on my doing so. I have come here to take possession of a large amount of property which has fallen to me by will. See! here is the advertisement that apprised me of my good fortune.

Here he handed to the Quaker a copy of the paper containing the advertisement whose history we have given above. The Quaker looked at it with importubable gravity, and continued. Yes, I see thou art in luck; but as my demand is a small one, I think I must insist on payment before thou comest into possession of thy large estate.

A tap at the window here brought the county court sheriff into the presence of the parties. The swindler was particularly astonished at the appearance of this functionary, who immediately began to act his part of the drama.

What! exclaimed the rogue, you surely haven't sued me.

Yes, I have, replied the Quaker; and thou should'st be thankful that nothing worse has happened to thee.

Come in then, said the debtor, finding himself fairly caught; come in then and I'll pay you if I must.

The three went into the house together, and the slippery gentleman having ascertained the amount of the bill, paid it in full. The tailor having signed the receipt, placed it in the hands of his late creditor, with feelings such as may be readily imagined. The swindler took it and for the first time read the various items of which it was composed. He said nothing until he came to the last charge, which was for advertising; when he broke forth.

Hallo! what's this? For advertising. That's an odd charge in a tailor's bill. You are cheating me.

Oh no, cooly replied the Quaker, that's all right. I have charged thee the cost of publishing the advertisement which thou hast just showed me.

Here the swindler savagely demanded, Do you mean to say that you caused the publication of that advertisement?

Truly, I did, replied the Quaker, with most provoking coolness.

You told me a great falsehood in it! quickly returned the rogue.

Convince me of that, said the imperturable Quaker, and thou wilt find me ready to confess the fault.

You said in your advertisement that I should hear of something to my advantage, if I should come here.

Thou art mistaken, immediately responded the Quaker; I only promised that thou shouldst hear of something to advantage; and is it not to the advantage of a poor tailor to collect an old debt?

If I can catch you in the street, said the swindler in the deepest rage, I'll give you such a thrashing as will not leave the breath in your body!

Nonsense, now, said the Quaker. If thou really intendest to do anything of that sort, we had better step out into the back yard, and finish the business at once.

The rogue was completely abashed by the coolness of the Quaker, and stood speechless, and almost petrified.

Now, said the tailor, good naturedly, let me give thee a piece of advice. When next thou hast occasion to get a suit of clothes, thou had better not attempt to cheat the poor tailor, but pay him honestly; for then will thy conscience not disturb thee, and thy sleep will be sweet and refreshing. Farewell.

There is no doubt of the literal truth of this story, as the writer received it some time since from the lips of the Quaker himself.

A LEGEND OF THE IRON MASK.

During the seventeen years' confinement of this strange prisoner at Sainte Marguerite, St. Mara, who brought him to the fortress, was replaced by a Monsier De Bonpart, as governor. The daughter of the latter, just emerging from childhood to womanhood, grew up, with this mystery around her. She had seen the graceful figure of the masked prisoner promenading at night upon the terrace and at worship in the chapel, where he was forbidden to speak or uncover his face, the soldiers in attendance having their pieces always pointed toward him if he should do either. She discovered that her father always treated him with the greatest respect, serving him bareheaded and standing. His table-service was of massive silver, his dress of the richest velvet; he wore the finest linen and the most costly lace. She had heard her father accidentally speak of him as 'the Prince.' No wonder that his sad fate occupied her thoughts by day and his noble figure haunted her dreams by night. She, too, was young and beautiful, and their eyes occasionally met in chapel. He sang beautifully, and was a very skilful performer on the guitar. It is said she climbed the rocks under the castle terrace, and sang sweet songs to the poor captive. Thus a romantic love sprung up between them, and as it gained strength the young girl dared to purloin the keys from her father, and so obtained access to the prisoner. When the governor discovered his child's treachery he was struck with the greatest dismay. His oath was binding upon him to put immediately to death any one who had spoken to the prisoner. But she confessed her love for him, and pleaded piteously for her young life. The captive, also, to whom the Governor was much attached, joined his prayers to hers, and implored that they be made man and wife, and then the secret would be safe. The Governor was not stern enough to immolate his child, and perhaps a gleam of ambition may have flashed across his mind's eye, as, in the event of the death of Louis XIV., the prisoner would be acknowledged and his daughter sit on the throne of France. However, their nuptials were performed by the priest of the castle in the dead of night, and all were sworn to secrecy. From this union two children were born. A whisper of this reaching the ears of the Minister, the Marquis of Louvois, the prisoner was immediately removed to the Bastille for safe keeping; and the mother, the priest, and Governor disappeared. The children were sent to Corscia, to be brought up in obscurity under the name of their grandfather, Bonpart, which was corrupted into Bnonaparte. And thus, says the legend, Providence avenged the wrongs of the twin brother of Louis XIV., and restored the oldest branch of the Bourbon line to the throne of France.—SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY.

Coughing.—Coughing can sometimes be stopped by pressing on the nerves of the lip in the neighborhood of the nose. A pressure there will almost certainly prevent a cough when it is beginning. It is generally known that sneezing may be stopped by this plan, but it is new to many that it can check coughing. Pressing right in front of the ear may also stop coughing. It is also a preventive of hiccup, but much less so than of sneezing or coughing.

Wet Boots.—Here is a simple way of taking care of wet boots. When first taken off fill them quite full with dry oats. This grain has a great fondness for damp, and will rapidly absorb the least vestige of it from the wet weather. As it takes up the moisture it swells and fills the boot with a tightly-fitting last, keeping its form good, and drying the leather without hardening it. In the morning shake out the oats and hang them in a bag near the fire to dry, ready for the next wet night; and then draw on the boots and go happily about the day's work.

Ventilating Rooms.—The following simple method for ventilating ordinary sleeping and dwelling rooms is recommended: A piece of wood, three inches high and exactly as long as the breadth of the window, is to be prepared. Let the sash be now raised, the slip of wood placed on the sill, and the sash drawn closely upon it. If the slip had been well fitted, there will be no draught in consequence of the displacement of the sash at its lower part; but the top of the lower sash will overlash the bottom of the upper one, and between the two bars, perpendicular currents of air, not felt as draught, will enter and leave the room.

SHORT ESSAYS.

Who is wise? He that is teachable. Who is mighty? He that conquers himself. Who is rich? He that is contented. Who is honored? He that honoreth others.

Charity is never lost; it may meet with ingratitude, or be of no service to those on whom it was bestowed, yet it ever does a work of beauty and grace upon the heart of the giver.

Generosity during life is a very different thing from generosity in the hour of death. One proceeds from genuine liberality and benevolence, the other from pride or fear.

Self.—Say nothing respecting yourself either good, bad, or indifferent—nothing good, for that is vanity; nothing bad, for that is affectation; nothing indifferent, for that is silly.

Value of Time.—As nothing truly valuable can be attained without industry, so there can be no persevering industry without a deep sense of the value of time.

Solitude and Society.—It is easy in the world, to live after the world's opinion; it is easy in solitude to live after your own; but the great man is he who, in the midst of the crowd, keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude.

Honesty.—There is no man, but for his own interest hath an obligation to be honest. There may be sometimes temptations to be otherwise; but, all things considered, he shall find it the greatest ease, the highest profit, the best pleasure, the most safety, and the noblest fame to be honest.

RANDOM READINGS.

The key is an uncertain gait—whis-key.

'Is that cheese rich?' asked Bloggs of his grocer. 'Yes,' was the candid reply, 'there's a million in it.'

Why is the end of a fish's tail like the Prince Imperial of France? Because it is the last of the bony parts.

It has been cold enough in Kansas to freeze whiskey, and some of the drunkards there have become solid men.

Procrastination.—It is with our good intentions as with our wishes—to-morrow is but too often the hash of to-day.

Forty girls will run after a brainless snob with a gold-headed cane, where one will take a fancy to a modest fellow with common sense.

Mr. Naylle, of Toronto, was knocked down by mistake for another man, recently. He hopes they'll hit the right Naylle on the head next time.

An Indiana Sundayschool man writes to a Bible firm in New York: 'Send me some Sunday-school papers and books. Let the books be about pirates and Indians as far as possible.

A Green Bay man thinks it very wrong for a boy to go to a circus, but he will keep a lad turning a fanniagmill ten hours, hand him five cents, and stand and wait for the boy to thank him.

Disputes.—It is an excellent rule to be observed in all disputes, that men should give soft words and hard arguments; that they should not so much strive to vex as to convince an opponent.

Ignorance and Violence.—There never was any party, faction, sect, or cabal whatsoever, in which the most ignorant were not the most violent; for a bee is not a busier animal than a blockhead.

'Father, what does a printer live on?' 'Live on!—the same as other folks o' course. Why do you ask, Johnnie?' 'Because you said you hadn't paid anything for your paper and the printer still sends it to you.'

Three sisters of Dubuque, are so set in their temperance principles, that they make the hired girl smell the breath of every gentleman that calls, and report the result before admittance to the parlor can be obtained.

An Aberdeen pastor said to one of his feminine congregation, 'Are you happy?' 'Yes, sir,' she replied, 'I feel as though I were in Beelzebub's bosom.' 'Not in Beelzebub's!' 'Well, some of the patriarch's, I don't care which.'

A Plainville clergyman insists that he saw a snake forty feet long and as big round as a barrel of whiskey. A pretty good sized insect that. We have no doubt that he saw it, but he unquestionably saw the barrel of whiskey before he saw the snake. It seems more reasonable, somehow.

Idleness.—It is a mistake to imagine that only the violent passions, such as ambition and love, can triumph over the rest. Idleness, languid as she is, often masters them all; she, indeed, influences all our designs and actions, and insensibly consumes and destroys both passions and virtues.

'What are you after, my dear?' said a graudmother to a little boy, who was sliding along a room and casting furtive glances at a gentleman who was paying a visit. 'I am trying, grandma, to steal papa's hat out of the room without letting the gentleman see it; he wants him to think he's out.'

HAPPINESS.

If solid happiness we prize,
Within our breast this jewel lies,
And they are fools who roam;
The world hath nothing to bestow,—
From our own selves our bliss must flow,
And that dear hut, our home.—Colton.

Not a bad story comes from the Savage Club, London, but it does not seem clear who first made the joke. 'Savage' was standing on the steps at Evan's Hotel, Convent Garden, where the club is now located, when a gentleman came up to him and asked him if there was 'a gentleman with one eye named Walker' in the club. 'I don't know,' responded the 'Savage;' 'what was the name of his other eye?'

A Scotch farmer was greatly exercised regarding the safety of his hay crop. The weather, though often threatening, favored his efforts till he succeeded in getting it safely gathered in, being in this respect more fortunate than many of his neighbors. After seeing the last whisp of straw tied around the stacks, he exclaimed, with a self-satisfied air. 'Noo, sin' I ha'e gotten my hay a' safely in, I think the warld would be greatly the better o'a guid shower.'

Waggs went to the depot of one of our railroads the other evening, finding the best car full, said in a loud tone:

'Why, this car isn't going.'

Of course these words caused a general stampede, and Waggs took the best seat. In the midst of indignation, Waggs was questioned:

'You said this wasn't going.'

'Well, it wasn't then; it is now.'

The sold laughed a little, but Waggs came rather near a good thrashing.

A little boy was carrying a bottle of ginger pop down King street, in Washington the other day, when suddenly the cork flew out and popped him in the right eye. When he had sufficiently recovered from his astonishment, he yelled so vigorously that a small crowd collected around him to ascertain the matter. Two carpenters, at work on the next block around the corner, in their anxiety to see what the excitement was about, fell out of the second story window on to a peanut stand beneath. Then two women fainted, one of whom suddenly disappeared in an adjacent coal cellar. Three small boys shouted 'fire!' and a man with a long ladder on his shoulders, hearing their cries, turned around suddenly, and after overturning an apple woman amidst the demoralizing ruin of her wares, the end of the ladder demolished a plate glass window, and finally settled itself on an old gentleman's worst corn. Then a fat old lady had an eye goughed out by an umbrella, and a Dutchman and Irishman, after excitedly endeavoring to explain to each other the cause of it all, got into a fight and rolled recklessly into the gutter. By this time seven policemen, headed by two fire engines, came upon the scene, and arrested nine innocent lookers on. This had the effect of dispersing the crowd, most of whom, to this hour, haven't the remotest idea what it was all about anyhow.

Notices of the Press.

The ever increasing circulation of this excellent monthly proves its adaptation to popular desires and needs. Indeed, when we think into how many homes it penetrates every month, we must consider it as one of the educators as well as entertainers of the public mind, for its vast popularity has been won by no appeal to stupid prejudices or depraved tastes.—Boston Globe.

The character which this Magazine possesses for variety, enterprise, artistic wealth, and literary culture that has kept pace with, if it has not led the times, should cause its conductors to regard it with justifiable complacency. It also entitles them to a great claim upon the public gratitude. The Magazine has done good and not evil all the days of its life.—Brooklyn Eagle.

ESPECIAL attention is called to the various advantages offered by this Company to persons of the most limited means, who are desirous of insuring their lives. By the payment of Ten Dollars entrance fee, and Two Dollars yearly dues, members become insured for from one to five thousand dollars, and are subject to no further demands, except upon the death of a member; when a call of one dollar and ten cents is made upon each survivor. This plan renders Life Insurance, hitherto impracticable to any but the wealthy, now within the reach of the poorest classes.
