BELONGING TO HISTORIC WOMEN.

The Subtle Charm Pertaining to Articles Once Valued by Heroines of the Past.

There is a certain vivid pleasure to many people in gazing at or in touching articles that had once any peculiar significance to the owners, when those owners were the personages of history about whom any romance of tragedy clings: for it is tragedy, after all, that makes things most human, since we are all one in the common lot of pain. When one sees in a certain museum a jewel-box of silver-gilt, not the most beautiful jewel-box in the world either, one is immediately arrested because it belonged to Josephine—there is but one Josephine, so to be called in the world. It was given to her by Bonaparte; and looking at it a thrill of melancholy pleasure stirs us, if we be women. There was nothing especially fine about Josephine; she was not great, nor greatly good; but she was beautiful, she was in high places, she loved, she suffered; romance and poetry surround her; and all women have a place in their hearts for Josephine, and because the jewel-box her lover gave her was a precious thing to her, it becomes somewhat precious to them. Or here is a bit of lace that Marie Antoinette tied round her proud and princely throat, that throat long and white and arching like a swan's; and all the horrors and greatnesses of the French Revolution rise like vast ghosts through the film and mist of that piece of point as we gaze at it. It is these things of women that have carried themselves well in the eyes of the world that interest us. The armor worn by King Henry IV., the gold handle of the dish used by the great Rameses II., the breastplate hacked in one of the world's great battles, the coins of Nero and of Alexander, the huge and ancient head of Athor, do not possess the power over us that the spinet does on which Caroline Bonaparte doubtless played her pleasant tunes to the dashing Murat, to the great Emperor; while the pitiful little tinkle in which it now answers the daring touch seems only to mock the moment as Galuppi's toccata did, "like a ghostly cricket creaking where a house was burned." A thing that is priceless in the way of money—a vase that has no beauty, but immense costliness; a picture that needs a microscope to detect its fine points, and is worth a king's ransom—such things do not detain us long when we are in the rooms of the collectors. We had rather see the ring that Essex sent back to Elizabeth, or the little circle with which Darnley plighted troth to Mary Stuart, or the glass beaker that holds the luck of Edenhall, than the largest and brightest diamond ever cut, if that hold no history. The ring of Gyges is worth more than the treasure of Crœsus. It is as though we projected ourselves into the sensibility of those that have had great parts to play in life, when they interest us; and in seeing the objects they have handled, that had meaning and worth to them, we make the projection more intense and real.

Helpful Thoughts.

True wealth consists in health, vigor and courage, domestic quiet, concord, public liberty, plenty of all that is necessary, and contempt for all that is superfluous.

There is no royal road to anything. One thing at a time, all things in succession. That which grows fast withers as rapidly; that which grows slowly, slowly endures.

Learn undeviating steadiness of purpose and endurance of misfortune; tolerate the ignorant; be benevolent of heart, and learn to receive favors without being humbled by them.

To think we are able is almost to be so; to determine upon attainment is frequently attainment itself. Thus earnest resolution has often seemed to have about it almost a savor of omnipotence.

All honest men are working for the good of their fellow men; all love of industry, all love of integrity, all love of kindred, all love of neighbor, all love of country, and all love of humanity are expressed in labor for others.

The discovery of what is true, and the practice of what is good, are the two most important objects of life.

Degeneration begins when the point is reached where one is thoroughly satisfied with himself or his attainments.

Strength must be found in thought, or it will never be found in words. High-sounding words without thoughts corresponding are efforts without effects.

Power of Sympathy.

Sympathy is the soul of our best friendships, and an essential element in all true religion as well. It is one of the activities of love. It is our feeling with and for another, and takes various forms according to our relations to that other. It takes the form of pity where its object is in suffering and distress. It goes out in heroic support and defence when its object is subjected to injustice and reproach. It assumes the form of adoration when our highest and holiest feelings are called out toward One who comes to us radiant with the love of God, and Who offers to take us into friendship with Himself. It was one of the great aims of Jesus to quicken men's sympathies so that they should see things as He did, and should feel about life as He felt. Some real sympathy on the part of men with Him lay at the basis of all true discipleship to Him. Men would never be drawn to Him as long as they felt no attraction for His views of truth and duty. But when once they came to belong to the truth as He expressed it; when they recognized His ideas of God and of life to be the true ones, and yearned to make them more fully their own—then they came to Him, drawn by the strong attraction of an inner affinity of life.—Sunday School Times.

Making Artificial Silk in France.

They manufacture now at Besançon, in France, an article of artificial silk which promises to have a great future. The new stuff is practically a form of collodion, with wood pulp as a basis. The formation of thread is simply mechanical, and the high inflammability inherent to the collodion family is said to have been overcome by steeping the artificial stuff in a solution of ammonia, thus rendering it as slow of combustion as any other material. The manufacture appears to be marked by unusual success in the quality of the product. It is also stated that the "silk" thus made has been used in the textile industries.

The Old Woman in the Crowd.

On one occasion at the Imperial Institute procession, an old woman in the crowd was heard to say: "I was told that the Empress of India was coming here to-day. I do enjoy seeing those black people, so can I would rather see the Queen any day."—London Answers.

Experience Has Proved It.

A triumph in medicine was attained when experience proved that Scott's Emulsion would not only stop the progress of Pulmonary Consumption, but by its continued use health and vigor could be fully restored.

Get the Best.

The public are too intelligent to purchase a worthless article a second time on the contrary they want the best. Physicians are virtually unanimous in saying Scott's Emulsion is the best form of Cod Liver Oil.

ADVANTAGES OF SLOW TRAVEL.

The Old-Style Transatlantic Liner and That of the Racing Liner.

The slow-going steamer, say 300 to 350 miles a day, has decided advantages over the racer. To attain a high speed enormous propelling power is required and the speedy greyhound is like a great machine shop, the pulsations of the machinery jarring every portion of the boat. To double the speed of a vessel at sea the power must be cubed. The vessel to plow through the water at twenty-four miles an hour must displace twice as much water in an hour as it does when going at twelve miles an hour. That would require twice the power. But in addition to this the water must be displaced in half the time, and that requires the power to be doubled again. So that a vessel which would consume five tons of coal in an hour going at a rate of twelve miles, would consume, all other conditions being equal, twenty tons per hour if the speed is increased to twenty-four miles. After all there are attractions in the old style of going to sea, with its leisurely gait, its perfect rest, its absolute change from all the conditions of life on land, which are superior, in the judgment of many people, to the five or six days of hotel life between New York and Liverpool on one of the "liners."

An Ancient Phrase.

The phrase, "To pour oil on the troubled waters," is so obscure as to baffle all attempts to trace out its origin. The Venerable Bede in his "Ecclesiastical History" (730 A.D.) tells of a priest called Vitta who was sent into Kent to fetch Eanflede, King Edwine's daughter, who was to be married to King Oswiara. He was to go by land but return by water. Before he departed Vitta visited Bishop Aidan, who had the reputation of performing miracles, and besought his prayers for a prosperous journey. The bishop blessed him, and, predicting for his return a great tempest and a contrary wind that should rise suddenly, gave him a pot of oil, saying: "Remember that you cast into sea this oyle that I give you, and anon, the winds being laied, comfortable fayer weather shall ensue on the sea, which shall send you againe with as pleasant a passage as you ever wished." The application of oil in the storm was effective.

For Sunstroke

In view of the arrival of the hot season everyone should be familiar with these rules in case of sunstroke.

Remove the patient to a cool and shady place, where there is plenty of fresh, pure air. Strip the clothing to the waist and place the sufferer in a recumbent position. Pour cold water (ice water) upon the head and chest until consciousness returns. Apply ice to the head and rub the body with it; but if the skin is cold no ice should be applied. When practicable the patient should be put in a bath at 70 degrees to reduce the temperature.

In heat exhaustion stimulants should be given freely, and, if the temperature is below normal, as shown by the skin being cool and clammy, the hot bath should be used. Ammonia and water may be given if necessary.

The subject of sunstroke is liable to a second attack, and should do no mental work for months and keep from all excitement.

"Not a Drum Was Heard."

What schoolboy is there that does not know these beautiful and touching lines on "The Burial of Sir John Moore?" Yet very few people are aware that the author of these lovely verses rests in the old ruined church of Clonmell, near Queenstown, County Cork, where a modest, moss-grown little tablet tells us that: "Here lie the remains of the Rev. Charles Wolfe, late curate of Donough more, who died at Cove, 23rd February, 1823, aged 31 years. The record of his genius, piety and virtue lives in the hearts of all who knew him. Looking unto Jesus he lived. Looking unto Jesus he died. He is not dead, but sleepeth." It is doubtful if we would even know this much about the resting place of this true poet, but for the excellent work carried on in this country by the organization called the "Fund for the Preservation of the Memorials of the Dead in Ireland."

Power of Sympathy.

Sympathy is the soul of our best friendships, and an essential element in all true religion as well. It is one of the activities of love. It is our feeling with and for another, and takes various forms according to our relations to that other. It takes the form of pity where its object is in suffering and distress. It goes out in heroic support and defence when its object is subjected to injustice and reproach. Every Woman Rose to Her Feet.

At a club reception given in Australia not long ago, the wife of Paul Blouet, better known as "Max O'Rell," was present. It was the custom of the club that distinguished strangers should rise for a moment, wherever they might be sitting, as soon as they were introduced. When Mrs. Blouet's name was announced, so great was the desire to see the wife of the witty, wise, and wicked Frenchman, that almost every woman in the room rose to her feet, and stared her neighbor in the face to see if she might be the happy woman. There was a general titter all over the room, and as the eager ladies fell back in their seats, the sarcastic president said he "believed there must be some mistake. Max O'Rell had but one wife, and if the other ladies would keep their seats, no doubt she would rise so they could see her."

Kicked by Proxy.

Ambassadors occasionally still hold tightly to some privileges which are hardly in keeping with the spirit of the age. Not only envoys themselves, but their servants also, are free from arrest in countries to which they are accredited, and an assault committed on an envoy's servant is regarded as an injury suffered by the envoy himself. Thus, in 1870, Baron Turgot, the French ambassador at Madrid, wrote indignantly to his Government: "I have this day received a kick in the back of my servant." The latter had been molested in the riots that followed the overthrow of Isabella II., but an apology and fine were demanded pretty much as if the minister himself had been kicked.—New York World

Expensive Luxuries.

The Briggs trial cost the Presbyterians in the vicinity of $110,000, according to a Washington dispatch, while New York City has thus far expended $91,000 upon the infanta and the Duke of Veragua, from which it may be inferred that heresy and royalty are pretty expensive luxuries.—Boston Transcript.

Seasonable Advice.

The time is at hand when periods of intense heat must be expected, and sensible people will be careful in diet, temperate in drink, quiet in behavior, even in temper, and content as nearly as may be to let the wide world wag as it will.
