The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	2 ♣	2 ♥	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	4 ♠

Opening lead—king of clubs.

Point count is usually thought of only in connection with the bidding, but point count can also be put to work in some hands during the play.

South is destined to go down one at his four spade contract if the defenders cooperate fully to get the most out of their cards.

The king of clubs is opened and East plays the encouraging eight, the beginning of a high-low signal to identify a doubleton.

West continues with the queen (not the ace) to show complete control of the suit. Since the king and queen win the first two tricks, East of course knows who has the ace of clubs.

West now leads a low club. Dummy's jack is automatically played and East must be careful to ruff with the jack of spades. This is not a difficult play at all because West appears to be asking East to ruff as high as he can. If West did not want East to ruff he would have led the ace of clubs with which he had marked himself.

South overruffs with the queen, but there is now no way for declarer to avoid the loss of two trump tricks, and he is down one.

How is West supposed to detect that this is the winning line of defense? Here is where point count comes in.

West observes in his own hand 13 high card points. Dummy shows with 13 points also. Since there are just 40 points in the deck, only 14 points remain to be accounted for in the East and South hands.

South must have the bulk of them to account for his opening bid. East cannot have an ace, otherwise South's spade bid would consist of 10 points.

The only hope for the setting trick, therefore, must lie in making two trump tricks. This is possible if East was dealt either the ten, jack, or queen of spades. Hence the ace of clubs is underled as the only conceivable chance of defeating the contract.

BEDTIME STORIES

A Gladsome Sight

Only those who sometimes roam,
Truly know the joys of home.
—Paddy the Beaver.

Paddy the Beaver had been away from home a long time. He had been taking a vacation. He sometimes does that in summer when there is no work that needs to be done. Now he was on his way home. He had safely crossed over from another brook to where his own home brook came down at the foot of the Great Mountain. Little Joe Otter had often crossed there between the two brooks. But it was a very different matter for Paddy to do it. Little Joe is at home on land as well as in the water. He is quick and he is a fighter. Paddy is not at home on land, and out of water is slow and clumsy and so is not a good fighter.

And there swimming out from the end of the dam was Mrs. Paddy.

Paddy hurried down Laughing Brook. Soon he was where it was familiar. Such a glorious feeling it was, that feeling of being almost home! It wouldn't be far now to the home pond where the house was and where he would find Mrs. Paddy and the children.

He stopped to rest for a moment. As he did so he heard a sound that filled him with such joy as he had not known for a long time. Can you guess what that sound was? It was the crash of a falling tree. There was no wind blowing. In fact, it was very still. There could be just one reason for that tree falling; it had been cut down, and Paddy knew that Mrs. Paddy must have done it.

He hurried then. In a few minutes he swam around a bend of the brook and there in the moonlight ahead of him was his own pond. What a gladsome sight that was! There on the farther side was the roof of his house, the house that he and Mrs. Paddy had built themselves. In the middle of the pond stood the lone dead tree in which Mrs. Timmy the Flying Squirrel had been a prisoner. And there swimming out from the end of the dam was Mrs. Paddy.

Paddy slapped the water with his tail, but it wasn't the danger signal this time. It was just a light slap. Mrs. Paddy stopped swimming. She let go of the food branch she was towing. Then she swam straight toward Paddy. They touched noses.

"It's time you were back", said Mrs. Paddy. "It is high time you were back. There is work for you to do."

"What work?" asked Paddy.

"The dam leaks, replied Mrs. Paddy. "I have been too busy with the children to do the work you should do."

That was all the greeting that Paddy had, but it was enough. He knew that Mrs. Paddy had missed him and was glad to have him back. Together they climbed out on the dam and walked along it. Paddy could see little leaks here and there, but even these were a gladsome sight. He was home and oh, so glad to be there.

Earth Wears a Halo, But Only On The Night Side

By ALTON L. BLAKESLEE

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — At night our earth wears a curious green, red and yellow halo.

And it moves, as though swept by hurricane winds of 150 miles an hour.

Rarely can human eyes detect this faint and filmy halo.

But if our eyes were sensitive enough, one part of the halo would make even the darkest night like mid-twilight — like the time when you need to turn on your car's headlights. Perhaps some animals can see it, and so make their way easily in the dark.

This halo is called airglow, a fascinating mystery now being explored during the International Geophysical Year.

Dr. Franklin E. Roach, astrophysicist and an authority on airglow, is one of the few persons who has seen the belt of colored light floating on the night side of the earth.

LIKE A CLOUD

"It is filmy bands like the Milky Way, but moving like a cloud," he said. "To see it, you need a very dark night and must let your eyes become accustomed to the dark. Then you may catch glimpses of it by looking out of the sides of your eyes."

Special instruments, photometers, that can measure the intensities of selected wave lengths of light, have brought some knowledge of airglow. Rockets have shot through it with telltale instruments. Presumably there is a dayglow, too, but it has not been detected even with instruments.

Now during IGY, scientists of 30 nations are co-operating in intensive worldwide studies of the mystery light. Dr. Roach, a consultant at the Boulder laboratories of the national bureau of standards, heads a centre collecting findings charted around the globe.

FOUR BANDS

It's already known that airglow consists of four distinct bands of color Dr. Roach explains.

One is a band of green light, existing at about 60 miles up. At 96 miles up, there is a red glow. Yellow light comes from the air about 50 miles up. Below it is a layer of complex radiations, in the infra-red range which our human eyes cannot see

"But were our eyes sensitive to this infra - red radiation, we would have twilight all through a dark clear night," Dr. Roach said. "We would never be able to see the Milky Way at all. The whole history of astronomy and our knowledge of the universe would be different."

Shipping Will Get Attention

OTTAWA (CP) — The government will give more than usual attention to a Quebec labor group's request for a broader shipping policy, Prime Minister Diefenbaker said Tuesday.

He told the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labor he was deeply interested in their suggestions concerning Canada's ship - building, ship repairing.

Ted Payne of the CCL'S National Federation of Metallurgy recommended in a brief separate to the CCCL's annual presentation to the cabinet that all Canadian coastal shipping be restricted to ships built owned, repaired and maintained in Canada.

There were similar restrictions in the United States, France, Japan and elsewhere.

Mr. Payne also requested a national shipping policy which would promote the planning and development of a merchant marine fleet. He suggested special assistance subsidies to promote the growth of a deep-sea fleet.

Mr. Diefenbaker said the suggestions hit a responsive cord in the federal cabinet and dovetailed with his government's plans for a national development policy.

He indicated shipping is a national problem, although shipbuilding industries fall within laws.

The newly-independent Federation of Malaya has more than 6,000,000 population.

Imports Will Remain Heavy

SEIGNIORY CLUB, Que. (CP) Trade Minister Churchill said Tuesday night Canada likely will continue for some time to buy more than it sells on world markets.

He also told the Canadian Exporters' Association here that public opinion in Canada now appears to favor the diversion of some Canadian purchases from the United States to Britain and the Commonwealth.

Much of Canada's current trade deficit with the U.S.$1,200,000,000 in 1956 — had resulted from the purchase of equipment for Canadian industry. Many of these industries were destined to produce for the American market or to produce goods now imported from the U.S.

"Fulfilment of these expansion plans should, therefore, help to close the trade gap," Mr. Churchill said. "Nevertheless, insofar as the Canadian economy is likely to go on expanding, import requirements will remain heavy and may continue to outrun exports for a long time to come."

Purchase of a larger share of these expanding import requirements from overseas sources would help to strengthen the external positions of overseas countries and buttress Canada's overseas market.

"Since the United States does not suffer from balance of pay ments difficulties, a reduction in Canada's surplus with overseas countries at the expense of a deficit with the United States should have no adverse effects on markets in the United States," he said.
