A GREAT SPEECH.

Sir John Thompson at Petrolia.

THE CONSERVATIVE PICNIC.

THE CANAL TOLLS.

He desired to say a few words about their policy as regards other countries. They had been often accused of adopting an attitude hostile to the United States. This accusation had come to them from that country recently by a measure called retaliation. The statement had come that they had acted unfairly and contrary to treaty obligations with that country with regard to our canals. He had to say that the Government of Canada had always been in favor of making any arrangement with that country which would increase our trade, provided this could be got on fair terms, terms which any British people could honorably accept, and terms which would not compromise the future independence of our country. (Loud cheers.) Our friends across the line were over-shooting the mark when they stated that Canada had acted dishonorably or unfairly toward them in our policy with regard to the canals. He appealed to every man and woman in the audience when he stated that the enormous sums which Canada had expended upon her canals had been expended as much for the benefit, and had resulted as much for the good, of the people of Canada. Every foot which Canada had deepened her canals or widened them, and every additional lock or canal which Canada had built helped the western farmer of the United States to reach his markets and enhanced the value of his products. (Hear, hear.) They had had these canals upon the same terms as our own people, bearing not one dollar of the burden involved, but simply for the sake of peace and good neighborhood. They were willing to avoid all points of friction, knowing how many there were. They were willing to avoid quarrels as far as the minds of the Government and of the country would allow, and when the United States asked them to do more, they had simply to say no. (Applause.) The Government of Canada had never adopted the measure established by their own people with the view of injuring the commerce of the United States, and the Government of Canada would never break faith with their own people, or with the people of any nation on the face of the earth for that matter. He believed that the spirit of the Canadian people would sustain the Government in this quarrel, not only upon the merits of the quarrel itself, but upon the spirit of independence of the Canadian people, a spirit which he was proud to know was growing stronger and stronger every day from one end of the country to the other. (Applause.) He had told them now the policy of the Canadian Government towards the United States. They had been counselled time and time again to return retaliation by retaliation. They had been told that upon the Welland canal they could retaliate with severity upon United States commerce. Other places had been pointed out where equal harm to that commerce could be done, but the Government of Canada declined to bear themselves thus in any international quarrel, for in view of the great country which they possessed, in view of their great destiny, the Government of Canada believed that the people of this country could afford to bear themselves with patience now, and refrain from injuring in the slightest degree the commerce of their neighbors. (Applause.) That policy, he was sure, would be approved by the present gathering. In speaking of their commerce with their neighbors he had referred to the success which had followed their efforts to establish home industry in this country.

MADE NO PROMISES that involved a single right possessed by Canadians. (Applause.) What they had done with regard to the canals was strictly within their rights. He hoped then that the measure adopted by the administration of the United States as a time of temporary irritation would be the means of leading that country to believe that Canada is not disposed to meet them in the same mood. The Government of Canada offered all that the dignity and honor of this country would allow in the way of reconciliation. The Government had said that while the rebate system was not a violation of any treaty, they were willing to discontinue it after the present year, not because of any wrong involved, but simply for the sake of peace and good neighborhood. They were willing to avoid all points of friction, knowing how many there were. They were willing to avoid quarrels as far as the minds of the Government and of the country would allow, and when the United States asked them to do more, they had simply to say no. (Applause.) The Government of Canada had never adopted the measure established by their own people with the view of injuring the commerce of the United States, and the Government of Canada would never break faith with their own people, or with the people of any nation on the face of the earth for that matter. He believed that the spirit of the Canadian people would sustain the Government in this quarrel, not only upon the merits of the quarrel itself, but upon the spirit of independence of the Canadian people, a spirit which he was proud to know was growing stronger and stronger every day from one end of the country to the other. (Applause.) He had told them now the policy of the Canadian Government towards the United States. They had been counselled time and time again to return retaliation by retaliation. They had been told that upon the Welland canal they could retaliate with severity upon United States commerce. Other places had been pointed out where equal harm to that commerce could be done, but the Government of Canada declined to bear themselves thus in any international quarrel, for in view of the great country which they possessed, in view of their great destiny, the Government of Canada believed that the people of this country could afford to bear themselves with patience now, and refrain from injuring in the slightest degree the commerce of their neighbors. (Applause.) That policy, he was sure, would be approved by the present gathering. In speaking of their commerce with their neighbors he had referred to the success which had followed their efforts to establish home industry in this country.

PROUD OF THE CANADIAN FLAG, the emblem of their country. Such an attachment would lead to a united country which formed part of the glorious empire, which was a bulwark of that great empire. This sentiment they could look forward to with confidence, irrespective of the party to which those young Canadians belonged. He had no fear of their dealing with these great questions to which he had referred, and to the dealing with the relations which this country had to bear with our neighbors to the south. In conclusion, Sir John thanked the audience heartily for the welcome which they had tendered his colleagues, and he hoped the Liberal-Conservative party would continue to enjoy the confidence in which they had been held during the past 14 years. (Loud cheers.)

What Laboring Men Should Remember. From Harper's Weekly.

There are two fundamental principles which members of labor unions are most apt to forget, but which as Americans they should constantly have in their minds. One is, that if one man has a right to labor, so has another. The assertion that a man who does not belong to a labor union has no right to accept work on conditions which a member of a union will not accept, goes against the very essence of that freedom which forms the vitality of our whole political system. The other principle is that the worker is entitled to reward according to the quantity and quality of his work. Some labor unions have made it their policy to secure to the interior worker a chance equal to that of the superior by discouraging superior efficiency. This policy strikes at the very roots of civilization, for when the skillful, the industrious, the provident, may look for no better chance or reward or advancement in life than the unskillful, the shiftless, the improvident, one of the main incentives to progressive exertion is taken away and civilization will come to a standstill. Prudent working men will take this into consideration, and carefully avoid conflicts in which they would be on the distinctly un-American side.

Dr. Johnson wisely said: "He who waits to do a great deal of work at once will never do anything." Natural gas has been found in large quantities at Cayuga, Hamilton county. The people are using it for fuel and light. The Pope has given his consent to the introduction of a Slav liturgy into the Catholic and united churches of Prussian Poland. Ships are reported to be arriving at New York wharves without passing quarantine inspection. They take a channel that does not lead past the sanitary officers' post. Uncle Sam's quarantine is evidently stronger in his newspapers than on his sea-board.

nearly $1,800,000 worth, a very large output, but in 1891 it had fallen to less than $1,200,000. Canada sent to the United Kingdom in 1874 $7,000,000 worth, but in 1891 the farmers' products sent to the United Kingdom had increased to $14,000,000 worth in round figures. They had to consider whether it was not a fact that the vastly increasing market for the farmer in the markets of Great Britain had not been entirely lost sight of in the policy of their opponents, which would lead to discrimination against Great Britain involving the diminishing of that trade. The market in the United States had been dwindling for the last 20 years. (Hear, hear.) There were other public questions to which he might call their attention if time permitted, but as four or five others were to follow he would be brief. They had had questions arising within the last few weeks upon which he would touch for a few moments only affecting the religious or the race sentiment of the people into which this country was divided. We could not help the division of races which existed amongst us. We were engaged, all of us, in the patriotic work of

MAKING ONE GREAT PEOPLE out of these different races, and he believed we could accomplish that result by patriotically working for it as a whole people. (Hear, hear.) The one great calamity above all others that could befall this country was that religious discussions should be raised in connection with the political divisions of the people. The one great danger which would menace the future of this country, the union of this country, now so happily being accomplished, was that men should stand arrayed against each other on questions of government because they differed in religion, or because they differed as regards race. (Hear, hear.) He was sure with a confidence greater than he could explain, that the people of this country would commit no such folly, and whenever they had, as unfortunately they might have, to deal with questions affecting the sympathies of race or opinions on which people divided as regards questions of religion, they could rely upon the determination of the people of this country to stand united and to work out a grand future for the country by agreeing to be liberal with each other, by being fair and generous, and by tolerating what differences might occur. (Cheers.) It was the duty of the men who were charged with conducting the administration of this country to see that no difference of opinion of that kind was allowed to intrude itself in the affairs of state or to interfere in any degree with the peace and harmony of the people of this country. (Hear, hear.) He knew that the feeling was contained in the breasts of all people here assembled, Liberal or Conservative, and he hoped this feeling animated the breasts of the young Canadians grown up in this country since confederation. The future of this country and the destinies of this country were greatly in the hands of the young Canadians and above all things, it was a matter of pride for those concerned with the administration of public affairs to know that the young men of this country who had come upon the lists since 1867 were

This sentiment they could look forward to with confidence, irrespective of the party to which those young Canadians belonged. CHARLES EMMET.

"I AM CURED!"

Physicians, Pile Remedies and the Knife UTTERLY FAILED!
Yet there was Help!
GETS—I wish to inform you that the treatment consisting of SKODA'S REMEDY, which you sent me for PILES, has, as you stated in your letter accompanying the same, actually cured me.
Why, gentlemen, I can hardly realize it. I thought I was taking the long suffering I have endured, of the Pile Remedies, of the Physicians employed, of the two surgical operations performed (having had the Pile Tumors removed twice with the Knife) and all I could get was temporary relief. But now after taking SKODA'S DISCOVERY, THREE BOXES, I feel like a new man. I am cured.
I am now able to work every day, and shall start for Virginia in a few days to work cutting timber.
You freely gave me the medicine, and I will not pay you for what you have done. Enclosed find $25, which is about what I paid for one operation that did me really no good at all.
Respectfully yours,
Banger, Me. CHAS. EMMET.
