referred to the many friends who had assembled to once again spend an evening with him in social fellowship and take a brief look backward over the years.

"We remember when you married an Island born girl in Boston 58 years ago and the years you both spent in annual vacation in New London.

Reference was made to the death of Mrs. Mace in 1943 and also to their family which accompanied them to the Island from year to year as they grew up.

"Visitors to your lovely summer cottage were always welcome, and your generous gifts to school and church are kindly remembered by young and old."

Referring to his life of action, the address reviewed the career of Mr. Mace from the time, when as a boy of 12 years he joined the British training ship "Saucy Arcthuusa" and later as a sailor on merchant ships, called the Seven Seas."

The address also touched on the success which Mr. Mace achieved in his business which he conducted in Boston.

"As a tangible token of our esteem, we ask you to accept this cane, with the hope that it will be your companion on many walks and sometimes as your thoughts travel back to 'The Island', your mind will be filled with pleasant memories of the many friends you left behind you there."
