SUMMER SCHOOL OF SCIENCE.

An evening was devoted to the discussion of amateur photography on Monday and much information on that subject was given by W. A. Hickman, of Pictou. On Thursday the school took a delightful trip through Switzerland and Italy by means of lime light views explained by Dr. Morrison, of St. John, N. B., who spent a year in travelling over the scenes depicted.

Dr. Bailey, of Fredericton, aided by the lantern, gave a most interesting account of the Rock Ruins on Friday evening. The action of the elements upon different rocks was clearly illustrated and explained. Specimens were exhibited from the Alps, Niagara, the famous Yosemite Valley, and also from different parts of the Maritime Provinces, in positions of which the subjects of rock ruins may be studied as perfectly as in any part of the world.

The agents acting upon rocks and wearing them down, are water, with the constant drip and flow; air, with its varied touch from zephyr to hurricane frost, causing the solid rock to heave scale, and fall, the mighty glacier with its steady majestic tread bringing with it the mighty rock which it has torn from its original bed and deposited in the valley below. In language beautiful, chaste, poetic, the doctor described these mighty changes continually going on in nature and dismissed his audience with a feeling of regret that he so soon had finished.

Admirable work is being done in the school this year in the study of English Literature under the tuition of Miss Eleanor Robinson, of St. John. Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream and Roskin's Froudes Agrestes are being studied. This is not the kind of study that is sometimes designated the study of literature in the schools where the grammatical analysis and parsing of the selection occupy the attention. Led by Miss Robinson the whole range of literature is traversed. The thought of the piece under study, is sought for and compared with the same authors' thought as expressed elsewhere, and also with other standard writers. One marked feature of the study is the tracing of the development of the authors' thoughts as proved by the comparison of their earlier with their later writing. Many of the students of this class are beginning to see a beauty in the study of literature they have not seen before, and will go back to their own schools and teach it as they never have done before.
