Hammarskjold Defends U. N. Charter Limitations

By MAX HARRELSON
UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold took sharp issue Wednesday with critics such as Sir Winston Churchill who say the United Nations charter must be drastically overhauled.

The real limitations of the organization, Hammarskjold said, are not the fault of the charter. Instead, he declared, they result "from facts of international life in our age which are not likely to be bypassed by a different approach or surmounted by attempts at merely constitutional reform."

Hammarskjold's views were outlined in a special introduction to his annual report to the General Assembly which opens its 1957 session Sept. 17. He dealt at length with the criticism of the UN and his own views as to its role in world affairs.

The secretary-general did not mention any UN critics specifically but it has been well known at UN headquarters that he was seriously concerned by growing attacks from Britain, France, Australia, Belgium and other former staunch UN backers.

The British foreign office, for example, has been studying the possibility of weighted voting—a system which would give heavy UN contributors such as the United States, a greater voice.

"If properly used," he said, "the United Nations can serve as a diplomacy of reconciliation better than other instruments available to member states."

He urged members to concentrate on broadening the practices of conciliation and negotiation in the UN rather than attempting formal charter revisions.

Referring directly to the question of weighted voting he said: "I believe that the criticism of the system of one vote for one nation, irrespective of size or strength, as constituting an obstacle to arriving at just and representative solutions tends to exaggerate the problem. The General Assembly is not a parliament of elected individual members; it is a diplomatic meeting in which the delegates of member states represent governmental policies, and these policies are subject to all the influences that would prevail in international life in any case."

Teachers' Qualifications And Salaries Reported On

OTTAWA (CP) — Salaries for Canadian university professors, last year ranged between $2,000 and $20,000 but averaged $5,775, the bureau of statistics reported today.

The bureau's first detailed study of salaries and qualifications of teachers in 48 Canadian universities and colleges found that geographical regions and different university subjects affected salary ranges.

For example, in 1956-57 university teachers in western provinces averaged $5,922, in Ontario $5,934, in Quebec $5,669 and $4,827 in the Atlantic provinces.

The best-paid teachers taught medicine. Teachers of biological subjects, including zoology, botany, pharmacy and agriculture as well as medicine, had the highest median salary—$6,186—followed by those in the physical sciences, social sciences and the humanities.

By qualifications, the median salary for deans was $9,475; professors $7,973; associate professors $6,273; lecturers and instructors $4,184.

Average salaries in state-controlled and independent universities were about equal and higher than in church-related colleges, the bureau said.

However, because salaries reported were those in effect at January, 1957, and most universities announced revised and increased salary scales at the end of the academic year, the report of salaries for 1957-58 was expected to show "marked increases," the bureau said.
