A MYSTERIOUS CLERK.

The following advertisement appeared in the Rome, N. Y., Sentinel some years since: "The services of a competent accountant are desired by the advertiser to take charge of the bookkeeping and correspondence of a flourishing business. Liberal salary at permanent position is offered to one with proper credentials. Address—"

A hundred applicants presented themselves at the establishment of Mr. Corlis, and among the competitors there came a modestly attired person, who, more than the others, seemed, at first sight, acceptable to the proprietor.

The address of this applicant remained quiet and pleasant. His whole appearance that of an earnest, well educated man, who was desirous to get along in the world.

He brought with him and presented to Mr. Corlis, a few brief letters of recommendation from persons residing in Rochester, and exhibited a draft for a limited sum upon a responsible banking house in the latter city.

His story was simple and a right-forward, and his manners were altogether prepossessing. He wrote a fair business hand; his credentials proved satisfactory to the not over-cautious Mr. Corlis, and he was engaged.

Ernest Maywood, for thus the applicant signed his name, proved a model clerk. He must have been some thirty years of age when he entered the employ of Mr. Corlis. He might have been five years younger perhaps. He seemed to have the experience of a man of forty, at least, for he was cunning in accounts, and his knowledge of the ramifications of debt and credit was extraordinary.

His varied qualifications were quick by brought into requisition, and his employer very soon came to esteem him for his accuracy in mercantile matters, as well as for the evident goodness of character that marked his continually upright and honest course of conduct.

Mr. Corlis had a daughter, his only child, in whom were centered all his hopes. The father thought he saw in the character of his new clerk business qualities most desirable, and he believed him to be a man of integrity and worth; and at the end of a year he secretly determined upon bringing about an intimacy between Ernest and his daughter, with a view to making him his partner at the fitting moment, and subsequently, if possible, to uniting his daughter with him in marriage.

Maywood had once or twice been the guest of his employer at dinner, where he had been introduced to the fair and agreeable Miss Corlis, and on evening or two had been passed by him at her father's house; but nothing occurred to offer the parent a hope that his employee had been affected in any wise by his daughter's charms.

Thus the months passed quietly by; Maywood continued, in the same plodding, untiring round of duty, always at his post, ever devoted to his employer's interests, and more than satisfied the expectations of the thriving Mr. Corlis, who was fortunate indeed in the selection he had made in his now confidential clerk.

"Ernest," said his employer to him one morning, "I voluntarily increased your salary last January, because you merited it, though you did not mention the subject yourself. Two years ago to-day you became my bookkeeper. The balance-sheet exhibits a handsome profit upon the last year's business, to which result you have largely contributed, directly and indirectly. I now propose to offer you an interest in the business, and on this date, if you agree to it, you shall become a partner."

The offer was a liberal one. The income derivable from such a share of the profits would have quintupled Maywood's income. On the part of his employer, it was the opening wedge for a future plan of making his daughter well, and to his mind, the clerk's decision—a decision—instinctively but frankly and kindly given, astounded the generous Mr. Corlis.

Maywood said he was content as he was; his salary was ample, and was a full equivalent for his humble services. He did not desire it in reward. He had no use for more money than his position now yielded him. He had no wish to incur additional responsibilities. He was happy, and if Mr. Corlis was a little disappointed, so was he. And there the matter dropped.

Maywood continued in the performance of his duties, and Mr. Corlis awaited another opportunity to carry out his long-cherished plan of reference to his daughter's prospects; while Miss Corlis let no fitting occasion to second her father's views and wishes.

"Time flies with silent wings." Another year elapsed without any peculiar change in the relations of the parties about whom we have written. One day a frightful collision took place at the railroad station in Rome, near which was Mr. Corlis' place of business. Ernest and Maywood were among the first on the scene, and were actively employed in their offices of kindness to the unfortunate, when the figure of a plaidy dressed man arose from a wrecked car, and Maywood followed closely upon the steps of his employer. The latter, in a moment, opened his eyes at the clerk's appearance, gazed recurrently at him, and shrilling the broken syllable "May—" expired.

Maywood started back, horror-struck. For an instant he was paralyzed. Then face and voice—the last glance! The clerk was bewilderment, and motionless as a statue—and the body was taken away.

Maywood, in the confusion, fled. Subsequent search for him proved futile. He disappeared altogether, and all efforts to find him, or to learn of his whereabouts or his fate, were all in vain. After weeks of unavailing inquiry the belief of his employer settled into no very satisfactory channel, though he feared that Maywood had either met with an accident and the terrible confusion, or that he must have committed suicide, and his place was filled in the counting house, while the business of the establishment went on as before.

What did do the bookkeeper had made of his surplus earnings, from time to time, if he had any, or whether he had saved any portion of his income, was unknown to his late employer.

A SUFFERING ARMY. Borne Down by a Relentless foe. The great army of sufferers from various rheumatic conditions joyfully welcome Chase's K. & L. Pills because the foster parents of their aches and pains are the Kidneys, which, on account of a diseased condition, are unable to remove the blood of uric acid poison, which is deposited in the joints, producing on the first provocation irritating aches and pains in the bones, joints and muscles. The reason that Chase's Pills relieve and cure is their wonderful power in restoring degenerated Kidneys to a perfect and natural condition, without which the system is supplied with blood teeming with poison that adds fuel to the fire of rheumatic complaints, demoralizing the entire system and rendering it liable to a complication of diseases terminating in dropsy, diabetes, or Bright's disease. A pleasant feature of these Pills is that, while most Kidney remedies encourage constipation, Chase's relieve and cure. In nearly all rheumatic attacks there exists constipation of the bowels, which is a sure sign that Chase's Kidney Pills; in fact, they are a perfect cure for constipation. This is endorsed by Edward Garrett, editor and proprietor of the "Rochester, Ont., Weekly Witness," and thousands of others. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box. The cheapest medicine on earth. Sold by all dealers. Edmanston, Bates & Co., Toronto.

Sold wholesale and retail by Geo. E. Hughes, Charlotteville.

Inquiries were instituted, and all means at hand used to find out any light upon the singular and sudden disappearance were availed of—but to no purpose. Maywood was gone!

Six years, with their sound of joys and sorrows, had passed, and changes and frowns had passed away, after the accident related, when one evening there halted before the door of Mr. Corlis a strange figure, which signified a lady and a gentleman who inquired of the merchant where at home they were shown into the drawing-room and the cards of "Mr. and Mrs. Ervin" were sent up. The name was not familiar, either to Mr. Corlis or his daughter.

"Ervin?" said the latter. "Ervin?" "It do not recognize the name." Mr. Corlis soon after entered the apartment, followed by his daughter, and the strangers rose to pay their respects.

"Mr. Ervin," said the merchant, "I am happy to meet you; but, really, I do not recall it." "I never had the pleasure of meeting you before. This is my wife, however," he added, presenting the modestly attired lady who accompanied him. "She says you will probably recognize her."

The lady advanced, offered her hand to Mr. Corlis and his daughter, and said: "Surely, Mr. Corlis, you have not forgotten this name?" "Maywood?" exclaimed father and daughter together.

"You are right," said the lady, calmly. "But how is this?" asked the merchant. "Well, I did this change occur?" "A woman?"

"Sit down, my dear sir," said the lady, "and I will at once unravel what must have seemed a most mysterious proceeding, in your estimation; but which, under the circumstances, could not be otherwise."

"Nearly twenty years ago, in Rochester, I married a man of whom I knew too little, and who proved himself unworthy of the confidence and love of her whom he so grossly deceived, before and after our union. His habits were dissolute; he soon became a confirmed libertine; and, as positively and happily home shortly became a scene of continuously riotous dissipation; his little property, with my own, was squandered, and, before five years had passed, we were homeless, penniless, friendless.

"When I could no longer bear up under the cruel treatment to which I was subjected, I made a final appeal to him. In his drunken wrath he shockingly abused me, and, in despair, I fled from the scene of my early miseries. I adopted my maiden name, Maywood, and love of her whom he so grossly deceived, before and after our union. His habits were dissolute; he soon became a confirmed libertine; and, as positively and happily home shortly became a scene of continuously riotous dissipation; his little property, with my own, was squandered, and, before five years had passed, we were homeless, penniless, friendless.

"I came here, entered your employ, saved a few hundred dollars, and you remember the title occurred which immediately procured my disappearance?"

"The accident at the station?" "Yes, we were hurrying about among the wounded, as you recollect, when my eye caught my full upon one of the dying sufferers."

"Yes, yes; I remember." "That man was my husband!" "There were tears in the eyes of the little creature who listened to this singular tale of woe."

"I recognized him, and he half pronounced the name of Mary, my baptismal name, as I hurried about amid the excited crowd of that fatal occasion. Stunned and bewildered by the trying position in which I thus suddenly found myself placed, and fearful of the results of exposure, I knew not what to do, or scarcely what I did."

"He did not survive the accident, however; and, two hours after, in a homely female attire, I claimed his unfortunate remains. No one recognized me in my plain apparel, and surely none could suspect that I, the veiled and plainly-attired woman who followed the corpse to its last resting place, was in fact the bookkeeper of the well-known Mr. Corlis."

"I left some forty dollars, through your kindness and liberality, I had been able to lay by a considerable sum of money, and I departed for the West, and, once more among total strangers, I continued the rumpus of the habitments and habits of my sex. With the news at my command, and I continued to live quietly and respectably, until some two years ago I met the gentleman, who offered me his hand, and now Mrs. Ervin, and this is my husband, sir."

"As may well be imagined, a happy reunion succeeded this disclosure, and the long time mystery which had shrouded the sudden disappearance of Mr. Corlis, was cleared up. The year or more may be ascertained that Mr. and Mrs. Ervin were not only very well-to-do, but the newly-wedded pair became the future fast friends of the merchant, former employer and his extended social circle."

"Keep your tongue," said the latter, "when you let that go your little girl yokes away long wild it."—Washington Star.

IN THE TREATY PORTS A Canadian Product Finds Favor in the Land of Confucius. VANCOUVER (Special) Oct. 14.—A passenger by the last vessel from China stated the other day that among other Canadian products which are fast coming into favor in the Chinese treaty ports, is the Canadian specific remedy for kidney diseases of all kinds known as Dodd's Kidney Pills. The medicine was first introduced by Canadians and its use both by Europeans and natives is attributed first to the accounts of its success in the Canadian and American newspapers, many of which are received in Shanghai and other parts, and later to its established efficacy in curing all kinds of kidney diseases, which are very prevalent in the country.
