

A FRENCH DETECTIVE STORY

Concluded.

But though one woman proposes another frequently disposes. When the servant rapped at Madame Gribeau's door next morning, there was no answer. The room was tenantless.

There was hardly the price, in portable property, of a cocktail left. At the first glance the detective summoned from Paris declared the job the work of one of the most expert thieves in the business.

The next thing was to find the thief, or rather thieves, for it was evident that a woman, unaided, could never have made so clean a sweep. This proved to be a quest worthy of rank with Diogenes' search for a very different sort of person. The slums of Paris were scoured, the jails investigated, all of the out-of-the-way recesses of the strange world of crime that festers under the current of life in the great city laid bare by the calcium glare of the law. In vain. Unless Madame Gribeau's orge had devoured her, she must have vanished into smoke as thin as her tale of woe.

The investigations were dropped, and Monsieur Jacquard scored a heavy entry to the account of profit and loss.

Late in September Madame Jacquard had occasion to visit Paris in a hurry and alone. Hastening into a carriage at the railway depot, she was followed by an elegantly dressed young man, who restored to her her handkerchief which she had dropped. The young man offered her further attentions, which she accepted. They drifted into conversation. Suddenly she noticed on his slender hand a ring of familiar aspect. It was a cat's eye, the very duplicate of one which had formed part of her vanished jewels.

That is a curious ring you have Monsieur, she observed.

It is indeed. A valuable trifle, yet one I would not part with for the treasures of the Great Mogul.

Indeed! a family relic, I suppose? A gift from a dead sister?

And the young man shed a silent tear. Madame Jacquard tore a leaf from her notebook and wrote on it 'call an officer.' When the guard passed she slipped it into his hand. The young man, absorbed in mournful reverie, failed to notice the act. It was not until he was assisting Madame Jacquard out of the car, and recompensing himself for the trouble by picking her pocket, that he became aware of the fact that an inscrutable monument of justice stood beside him. The young man proved to be an English pick-pocket, who had been compelled to leave London between days, and who had been living in such model retirement in Paris that the police had not yet got on his track. He was as obstinately silent in regard to himself as a sphynx. The cat's eye ring proved really to be Madame Jacquard's, but the mystery of his possession of it and of his connexion with Madame Gribeau remained unexplained. He had no acquaintances, and his lodging could not be traced.

Richmond Carter, as he called himself, was tried and sentenced. Some days later the portress of a house in the Rue Delacour applied to the police to investigate the strange absence of one of her lodgers. A young lady, who seemed to be an actress, had rented an apartment from her, sent her two large trunks in, and after having remained some months, occasionally visited by a young man of elegant aspect, had vanished. Her door was locked. The portress feared suicide or worse.

The police again went to work, assured of the tangible existence of the missing woman. It is supposed that upon her lover's arrest she had gone to England, and the authorities there had been put on the alert. Still without result.

At last a detective with a little of the argumentative in his lynx brain began to put this and that together. He found that Madame Gribeau's elegant visitor was never seen in her company. He called and left alone. He also found that Madame Gribeau frequently went out while her visitor was in the house. These facts arrived at, it did not take long to decide that Madame Gribeau and Richmond Carter were one and the same person. And so they were.

Astonishing Success.

It is the duty of every person who has used Boschee's German Syrup to let its wonderful qualities be known to their friends in curing Consumption, severe Coughs, Croup, Asthma, Pneumonia, and in fact all throat and lung diseases. No person can use it without immediate relief. Three doses will relieve any case, and we consider it the duty of all Druggists to recommend it to the poor dying consumptive, at least to try one bottle, as 40,000 dozen bottles were sold last year, and no one case where it failed was reported. Such a medicine as the German Syrup cannot be too widely known. Ask your Druggist about it. Sample Bottles to try sold at 10 cents. Regular size 75 cents. For sale by all Druggists.

Great Surgical Operation.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—Noticing the kindness of the press in giving dramatical descriptions of the exploits of beginners in surgical practice, the writer thought it not amiss to present the following on behalf of a young aspirant for popular favor in this city. An elderly lady presented herself for surgical relief. The surgeon being busy, and having more difficult cases to attend to, put her in charge of Mr. Galen, a student. It was a case of tumor of the throat. After due preparation the student proceeded to operate. When the patient had been put under the influence of chloroform, in order to obtain sufficient room he extracted every tooth in her head. The tumor extended downwards so as to become attached to the anterior lobe of the liver, laterally, so as to squeeze the tonsils into nothing, upwards so as to cause complete absorption of the hard palate, and forwards so as to protrude out of the mouth and curving upwards to become attached to the extremity and sides of the nose. This last quality was extremely troublesome, as the tumor, possessing contractility, would, when irritated, pull most uncomfortably at the nasal organ. Two long incisions were made around the tumor, and the investing membrane was removed. The tumor was seized with a pair of forceps, and while so held was completely separated from its attachments. Both the carotid arteries and the jugular veins were cut. The bleeding was tremendous. To his horror the operator now found the tumor too large to be removed. Nothing daunted, he proceeded to cut freely from both angles of the mouth backwards to the rami of the jaws. Both rami were then sawed off. Then, by applying a pair of bull-dog forceps to the tumor, he was able to remove it. The operation lasted three hours. Besides the carotids and jugulars, sixteen other vessels were cut and tied. When the operation was nearly finished, the student's master came in. He attempted no interference. When the student had finished, he looked around; their eyes met. Neither spoke. The master seized his pupil's hands, and the tear which glistened in his eyes bespoke his joy and his pride. When all was through, the patient was, to all appearance, dead; she was carried to her room. After lying to all appearance dead for three weeks, it was discovered by the aid of a magnifying glass that she breathed very faintly. When at the end of three months she was able to articulate very feebly, she, in pouring forth her thanks to her benefactor, spoke very feelingly of the relief which she experienced in having her nose relieved from its cruel tormentor.

Mr. Galen, we think, deserves great credit for his ingenious operation, and will, no doubt, take a high place among the surgeons of the day.

Yours truly, M.

Parnell at Lowell, Mass.

OPINION OF EARL DUNRAVEN'S LETTER.

Parnell was enthusiastically received at Lowell, and addressed a large audience on the 13th. His speech was a review of Earl Dunraven's letter, saying he first found time to read it this evening; that he had been unable to account for the sensation it had created, except for the reason that its writer was a lord, that, in certain American circles, was sufficient. The letter is inconsistent, brainless and false. It accuses the agitators of recommending tenants in Ireland not to pay rents, where they have only urged tenants to secure a reduction, and to first pay the shop keepers whom they owe rather than their landlords.

CATARRH.

Constitutional Catarrh Remedy CURES CATARRH.

Hear what a Reverend Gentleman says of the Constitutional Remedy.

T. J. B. HARDING, Esq., Brockville, Ont.:—
DEAR SIR—It is now two years since your "Constitutional Catarrh Remedy" was introduced to me. I have waited this long to see if the cure would remain permanent before doing this, my duty, to you, as at first the happy effects seemed to me to be "too good to be true."

I was afflicted in my head for years before I suspected it to be Catarrh. In reading in your Circular I saw my case described in many particulars. The inward "drop" from the head had become very disagreeable, and a choking sensation often preventing me from lying long. I would feel like smothering and be compelled to sit up in the bed. My health and spirits were seriously affected. When your agent came to Walkertown in August, 1876, I secured three bottles. Before I had used a quarter of the contents of one bottle I found decided relief, and when I had used two bottles and a third, I quit taking it, feeling quite clear of that ailment, and have not used any since until of late I have taken some for a cold in my head.

A sense of duty to sufferers from that loathsome disease, Catarrh, prompts me to send you this Certificate, unsoftened, with leave to make what use of it you may see proper. Yours truly,

W. TINDALL, Methodist Minister.
