A GIANT OF FINANCE.

SIR C. R. WILSON THE RENOWNED ENGLISH FINANCIER.

A Man whose Dealings are With Figures Big Enough to Make Your Head Swim —An Interesting Sketch of His Career.

This country is at present the scene of the most important financial operations of the kind since the death of Sir Charles Wilson, Knight of St. Michael and St. George, and Companion of the Bath, etc. Sir Rivers is over here as the champion and representative of the European stockholders of the Central Pacific Railroad, and it is in his hands that the sum of $2,000,000 belonging to these worthy and confiding investors in American securities. This vast sum, however, does not mean anything to Sir Rivers. He is in the habit of dealing with money in sums so large that the bare mention of them is calculated to make the head of the ordinary man ache.
As Comptroller General of the British National Debt—an office which he has held since 1871 and which he only resigned last month, Sir Rivers has had charge of funds amounting to the stupendous total of £1,000,000,000, and he has had to do with hundreds and hundreds of millions of pounds sterling. The income of this vast sum amounts to some five millions of pounds sterling a year, and he has had to do with it to his credit which troubles him.

In appearance Sir Rivers is very much like the Marquis of Dufferin, both in form and features. He is tall and thin, and might be a man of some fifty-five years of age. His hair has not yet turned, although his whiskers and moustache are quite grizzled. He has a most amiable, indeed a winning face, with a decidedly homo-sopulous twinkle of the eyes, but all the same, there are certain ominous lines about his mouth which would suggest that this same kind face can be very hard and firm at times, and that it can be so probably no more than a better than his Highness Ismael Pacha.

Sir Rivers was brought up in that nursery of good breeding and respect of manner, namely, the Foreign Department of the government, and he shows it in every move. His manner is full of subdued lordship, with a distinct touch of a Ches-terfieldian politeness, and his method of speech is slightly of the Parliamentary order, with the "hunting" of the public speaker, and his voice is very clear and penetrating.

Sir Rivers is above all things a diplomat, and he shows it in a thousand different ways. Whether speaking of men or places, he always conveys the idea that he knows a great deal about the subject that he is speaking of, and he has a way of saying things, and this gives him a suggestion of reserved power, with a suspicion of the iron hand in the velvet glove. As regards his dress, Sir Rivers is a bit of a dandy, but only to the extent that after leaving him one could recall one prominent feature of his attire.

It is, of course, with Egypt that the name of Sir Charles Rivers Wilson must be connected. He was a member of the Parliament in connection with which he stands out in this connection which speaks for itself. When he first went out to Egypt in 1876, as the representative of the British government, the country was practically bankrupt, and the seven per cent. unpaid bonds were quoted at 23. To-day, after various conversions, these same bonds are quoted at 100, and on which has been scaled down in the meantime to four per cent, stand at 100. Sir Rivers is a bit of a dandy, but
of his attire.

Another historical episode in Sir Rivers' career is his part in the building of the Suez Canal. He was one of the directors of the Suez Canal Company, and he was one of the three English government directors of the Suez Canal.

On the subject of Ferdinand de Lesseps Sir Rivers is very opinionated. He has a colleague of the "great Frenchman" and has nothing but admiration for him. He claims that De Lesseps should not be judged by the standards of ordinary men, and pays high tribute to his generous nature, broad views and enormous mental and physical activity. The manner in which he approached England when Lord Palmerston was Prime Minister—the interest enemy of his great scheme—after he had won his fight, commends him to the liveliest recognition. He knew that once out of the best and largest customers the canal would have their number about eighty per cent of the whole—would be Englishmen, and so he approached them in the most liberal spirit and made them conditions which seemed for him the offer of his fellow countrymen to an almost malignant extent.

"When I think," says Sir Rivers, "that this man, who was no engineer, no financier and an unsuccessful diplomatist, achieved a scheme which beat the great Napoleon himself, I am lost in admiration."

Disse of Am.

The reasons assigned by the school committee for the discontinuance of slates, slate pencils and the substitution of paper, pencils and rubber erasers in their places are as follows:
1. A light gray mark upon a slightly darker gray surface is more or less indicated and trying to the eyesight.
2. The resistance of the hard pencil upon the hard slate is trying to the muscles, and the resistance to which the muscles are thus trained must be overcome when beginning to write with pencil or pen upon paper.
3. The use of slates, slate pencils and sponges is a very uncleanly custom and leads to the establishment of very uncleanly habits.
