Let's Talk It Over

The charge has been made that many of the parents of Summerside pupils are in large degree responsible for the indifference work done by these pupils at the High School, and taking everything into consideration, we are inclined to agree.

There have been a number of cases of boys and girls who were failures in their grades at the high school, but who on being sent to institutions with dormitories where 24-hour supervision was exercised over them, immediately picked up in their studies and began to pass their examinations. We have heard these cases cited as examples of the superior teaching methods brought to bear on the pupil as soon as he left Summerside.

Whether the instruction is of a superior brand is, at least, debatable, but there can be no question that the supervision which the youths receive after school hours in these institutions is far superior to the supervision they receive in a large number of Summerside homes.

In these board schools the pupils are confined to their rooms for specified study periods; if they fail in one or two examinations, they lose so many evenings or weeks. No amount of coaxing or wheedling will change these regulations, for those in charge are not doing parents, but trained supervisors. Perhaps in the case of parents we should mix a little sympathy with our censure for in these times with so many counter attractions filling the minds of boys and girls as they pore over their text books, it is not the easiest job in the world for parents to control the situation. If they are efficient disciplinarians they will, of course, do so, but unfortunately a lot of pretty good people do spoil their offspring with the mistaken idea that they are being kind.

Boys and girls must grow up sometime, however. They can't be supervised indefinitely. Their sense of responsibility must be developed gradually just as their grasp of the rudiments of the English language or of mathematics is developed. If you have to keep after a boy or girl of sixteen or eighteen in Grades XI or XII all the time, then the battle of discipline is already lost. It is better for them to fail at home before you start paying out hard-earned money for their further education in a university, for it will be assumed when they arrive there that they are mature individuals with a sense of responsibility, and they will receive no such mothering there.

We have all heard of the type of teacher who scares the "daylights" out of his pupils, and has as a result of this terrifying, what is sometimes called "perfect" discipline. This is not discipline at all. Discipline is a form of instruction wherein the pupil begins to realize why he should be well-behaved, and is so because he appreciates the value of it, not because the wrath of some class-room Nero will descend upon him if he is not.

SIMPLE BUT Continued from page 1 and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another." (Job 19, V. 25-27).

These will be sung to the music of William Croft (1678-1727), former organist of Westminster Abbey. There will follow the beautiful 23rd Psalm ("The Lord is My Shepherd"), which is sung by the choir.

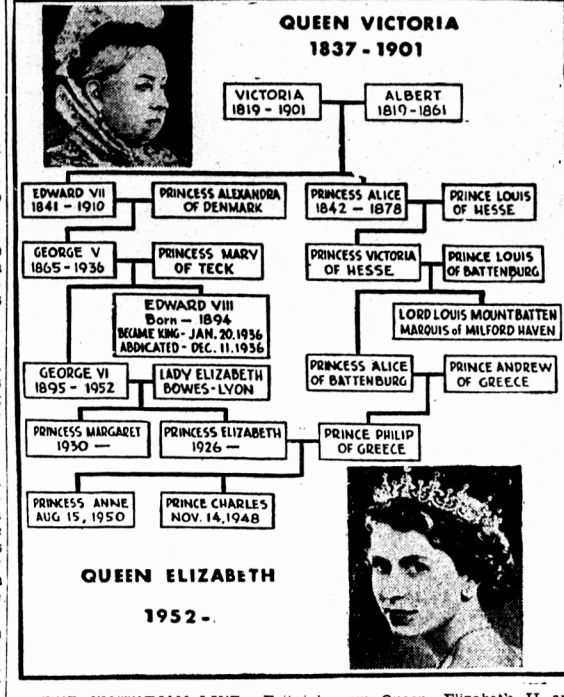

Next comes the Lesson, from the Book of Revelation (19, V. 1-7), read by the Bishop of Winchester. At this point in the ceremony, it now is common practice to sing a hymn. The one chosen for this occasion is, "The Strife is O'er, The Battle Done", from Hymns Ancient and Modern, (No. 135), which is heard at Easter.

The appointed texts for Scriptures will then be read by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The bare, sinewy phrases begin: "Man that is born of a woman hath but a short time to live, and is full of misery. He cometh up, and is set down, like a flower; he fleeth as it were a shadow, and never continueth in one stay."

As these poignant sentences are being uttered, the coffin is made ready and lowered out of sight into an open vault in the middle of the floor and in front of the altar.

The Archbishop of Canterbury then reads the solemn words of the prayer of committal. This moment of tension is broken by the choir singing a passage in the service:

"I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, write, from henceforth blessed are the dead which lie in the Lord; even so saith the spirit, for they rest from their labors."

THE VICTORIAN LINE - Britain's new Queen, Elizabeth II and Prince Philip are both great-great-grandchildren of Queen Victoria and are interestingly, note that Queen Elizabeth descended through the male line of Victoria's children while Philip descended through the female line.

"King George VI" Rink Members Presented With Silver Trays

A King is dead, and countless millions mourn. A far-flung Empire is bereft, forlorn; All around the earth flags are at half-mast, As myriad nations grieve, and downcast.

A humble man, but born to high station, He sought not power, fame, 'twas only fate, Or circumstance, that made him great, a King, Such honor small consolation did bring.

But when Britain's rightful heir stepped aside, He rose to duty, took it in his stride, 'Tho' he cared little for power or pelf, He showed his greatness by mastering self.

Handicapped by ill-health, timidly, His fortitude revealed his majesty, A kindly family man, he won a place Of high esteem, love-time cannot efface.

From British hearts anywhere in the world, He'll live where'er freedom's flags are unfurled; And generations, yet unborn, will sing Praises of an honored, good, beloved, King.
