CHAPTER XXIII.

There was shaking of hands and sorrow of heart. For the hour was approaching when merry folk were to part.

So we called for our horses, and asked for our waives.

While the jolly old landlord said, "Nothing's to pay."

Lilliput, a Poem.

We do not dwell upon the festivities of the day, which had nothing in them to interest the reader particularly. The table groaned under the usual plenty, which was disposed of by the guests with the usual appetite—the bowl of punch was filled and emptied with the same celerity as usual—the men quaffed, and the women laughed—Claud Halcro rhymed, punned, and praised John Dryden—the Udaller bumpered and sang choruses—and the evening concluded, as usual, in the Rigging-loft, as it was Magnus Troil's pleasure to term the dancing apartment.

It was then and there that Cleveland, approaching Magnus where he sat betwixt his two daughters, intimated his intention of going to Kirwall in a small brig, which Bryce Snailsfoot, who had disposed of his goods with unprecedented celerity, had freighted thither, to procure a supply.

Magnus heard the sudden proposal of his guest with surprise, not unmingled with displeasure, and demanded sharply of Cleveland, how long it was since he learned to prefer Bryce Snailsfoot's company to his own? Cleveland answered, with his usual bluntness of manner, that time and tide tarried for no one, and that he had his own particular reasons for making his trip to Kirwall sooner than the Udaller proposed to set sail—that he hoped to meet him and his daughters at the great fair, which was now closely approaching and might perhaps find it possible to return to Zetland along with them.

While he spoke this, Brenda kept her eye as much upon her sister as it was possible to do, without exciting general observation. She remarked, that Minna's pale cheek became yet paler while Cleveland spoke, and that she seemed by compressing her lips, and slightly knitting her brows, to be in the act of repressing the effects of strong interior emotion. But she spoke not; and when Cleveland, having bidden adieu to the Udaller, approached to salute her, was then the custom, she received his farewell without trusting herself to attempt a reply.

Brenda had her own trial approaching; for Mordant Mertoun, once so much loved by her father, was now in the act of making his cold parting from him, without receiving a single look of friendly regard. There was, indeed, sarcasm in the tone with which Magnus wished the youth a good journey, and recommended to him, if he met a bonny lass by the way, not to dream that she was in love, because she chanced to jest with him. Mertoun colored at what he felt as an insult, though it was but half intelligible to him; but he remembered Brenda's, and suppressed every feeling of resentment. He proceeded to take his leave of the sisters. Minna, whose heart he had softened towards him, with some degree of interest, but Brenda's grief was so visible in the kindness of her manner, and the moisture which gathered in her eye, that it was noticed even by the Udaller, who exclaimed, half angrily, "Why, ay, lass, that may be right enough, for he was an old acquaintance; but mind! I have no will that he remain one."

Mertoun, who was slowly leaving the apartment, half overheard this disparaging observation, and half turned round to resent it. But his purpose failed him when he saw that Brenda had been obliged to have recourse to her handkerchief to wipe her emotion, and the sense that it was excited by his departure, obliterated every thought of her father's unkindness. He retired—the other guests followed his example; and many of them, like Cleveland and himself, took their leave overnight, with the intention of commencing their homeward journey on the succeeding morning.

That night, the mutual sorrow of Minna and Brenda, if it could not wholly remove the reserve which had estranged the sisters from each other, at least melted all its frozen and unkindly symptoms. They were in each other's arms; and though neither spoke, yet each became dearer to the other; because they felt that the grief which called forth these drops, had a source common to them both.

It is probable that, though Brenda's tears were most abundant, the grief of Minna was most deeply seated; for, long after the younger had sobbed herself asleep like a child upon her sister's bosom, Minna lay awake, watching the dubious twilight, while tear after tear slowly gathered in her eye, and found a current down her cheek, as soon as it became too heavy to be supported by her long black silken eye-lashes.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain; and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhoea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup, and take no other kind.

(Special Correspondence of The Examiner.)

It would not convert many to the doctrine of agricultural distress, and landlord ruin, if the multitude were marched and counter-marched over the recently held cattle show, the annual exhibit of which took place at Doughton in Agricultural Hall. What I expected to see was some members of distress among the animals or men from the country; but it seemed to me that the beasts were usually fine and numerous, and the countrymen looked as if they were in a very flourishing condition. They say that figures don't lie; and certainly some of these animal figures could not lie (down) if they wanted to, while others could not get up even to be fed, and I thought if your market house should have such unhealthy looking fat for sale, how many of your country wives would chuckle over it for soap grease. Nevertheless the annual cattle show was, as usual, both a caution to unbelievers in such things, and a wonder to the habitués at these annual gatherings.

Wales is coming the front, as a gold-producing country—not as a recent discovery—for surface washings in the rivers of that principality, is an old story; but Mr. William Crockett, F. R. S., and President of the Chemical Society, and a Mr. Readwin, have put their heads (and hands) together, and reported so favorably on the existence of a deep deposit of quartz gold, that for several months a hundred men have been at work in the Mawddach Valley, with the result of exposing many thousand tons of stone, rich in the precious metal. It is even claimed that the mine now being operated is the richest in the world, capped with a further statement that some fifty other localities exist of a very promising character. Mawddach Valley is in the neighborhood of Dolgelly.

Were I to be asked what subject would next "vex men's souls" here, (depressed agricultural troubles) and divisional forms of government having assumed their chronic form) it would be, whether Protection is to be or not to be?—that is the question. It is rather pleasing than otherwise (as the buffaloes said when they found the awls in the telegraph poles) to find something that is likely to make a new "raw" on the public hide—it will be a counteractant to the ulcers already there. It seems that quite a large majority of voices in the central and associated chambers of commerce, are calling for more protection and fewer free trade regulations, and the existing fiscal system is declared by strong resolutions to require reform.

Although the expected and simultaneously held Socialist meeting came off on Sunday in Manchester and Glasgow and Hyde Park, the common report all round is that "there was but little excitement, and no disorder whatever." This "winter of our discontent" will soon change from the heroic to the zenoic.

Lord Mayor Sullivan, of Dublin, has "two months" as a first-class misdemeanor, which he will serve in Tullamore goal.

The Secretary (Harrington, M.P.) of the National League, has been arrested for what he defiantly published in the Kerry Sentinel.

The Statistical Society has brought out some curious facts in regard to making fortunes. (I refer to Mr. Goschen's address before that august body of compilers,) showing how the tables are being turned in favor of the minnows as against the pikes. Small fortunes have greatly increased, while large ones are becoming the scarce article. The revolutions in trade that I referred to in a former letter, are working many up, and putting a few down, and you can see that what every one feels every one must think about, hence things are finding their own level, and there is more freedom of action. It is the leaven of commercial righteousness that is leavening the whole Imperial lamp. Every colonial pulse feels the throbb, and regulates its motion by the working of the great central heart of Britain's Empire.

As I expected, the determination to put down systematic obstruction to parliamentary business is assuming a concurrent power that will doubtless stamp it out when the next house meets.

Bible Class Anniversary.

MARRIAGE OF TWO OF ITS MEMBERS AT TREMONT TEMPLE.

The Bible Class of H. J. Rice at Tremont Temple, Boston, held its fourth anniversary sociable on the evening of Nov. 7th, in the chapel of the Temple. The class at present numbers 135, and the past year has been the most successful in its history. After a musical entertainment by members of the class, Mr. Rice, in the name of the class, presented E. W. Corey, the Superintendent, with a handsomely bound copy of Bryant's Book of Poems.

Just after, the pastor, Rev. Emory J. Haynes, united in marriage William W. Carey, of 73 Revere Street, and Miss Lydia M. Garret, of 19 Myrtle Street, who have been members of the class most of the time since its formation.

When the congratulations of their friends had been received, the party adjourned to the supper room, where Caterer Tufts had spread a collation, to which the 150 present did full justice. Short addresses were made by Mr. Carey, Mr. Haynes and others.
