That Body Of Yours

By James W. Barton, M.D.

LIFE CHANGES AFTER AN ATTACK OF CORONARY THROMBOSIS

The death rate from coronary thrombosis (heart stroke) among physicians is higher than that of the general public of the same ages.

An opportunity to learn the truth about physicians and coronary thrombosis is provided by the report of the doctors who were members of the Medical Society, Annuity and Life Assurance Society Limited of Great Britain, aged 35 to 64, who held "immediate," noncancellable sickness insurance, providing benefit, on receipt of medical certificate, for periods of incapacity to work which last seven days or more.

The Society also has knowledge of all deaths in its membership even when these occur after an illness of less than seven days.

The prognosis (probable outcome of an illness) as far as life is concerned shows that about 30 per cent of all these men aged 40 to 64, experiencing first attacks, died in the first six days of the first attack—sudden deaths; another 8 per cent died in the remainder of the first month, making 38 per cent in all in the first month.

After this first month, the picture is quite different, with 2 per cent dying in the remainder of the first year, and an average of about 2 per cent dying annually in the next six years.

Of the men who survived their first attack of coronary thrombosis, about half had no further absence from their work because of heart disease (or its complications) that lasted as much as a week during the next six years.

The average time lost from work for coronary heart disease during the next six years by men who survived their first attack was about four weeks per man per year.

I have written before of a superintendent of a large military hospital, who, on being introduced to a fellow practitioner patient (admitted for his first attack of coronary thrombosis) told him not to worry.

"I've had six attacks. I go to bed for a month and then I'm up and about my hospital work until the next attack occurs."

From this report from Great Britain, it appears that when the patient survives the first attack, his life chances are almost as good as those of the general population who have not had attacks of coronary thrombosis.

False Face

By E. C. Buley

CHAPTER TWO

"THE BULLS" ARE HERE

It was peak time in the Octagon Club; and everybody who has visited New York in the right spirit knows where and what the Octagon Club is.

The band was syncoating furiously; and at times the players lifting up brazen voices to sing of Broadway and the white lights.

From one side of the octagon, which composed the clubroom, changing lights were thrown upon the dancers; heliotrope and orange, green and amber, every color except the white light which the band was eulogising.

Among the couples moving rhythmically under this spraying of rainbow tints, the most noticeable composed itself of Lola LePhone, one of the Club's star programme performers, and the tall youth, who was known to the Club's more regular patrons as the College Boy.

Lola was dressed in clinging black, with a red rose stuck jauntily in her raven hair. Her frock showed arms, back and bosom the colour of old and polished ivory, the tint of which, equally with her large and lustrous eyes, betrayed her Mexican blood.

She was thin, with the leanness of the dancer in training; but every languid motion she made was eloquent of grace.

Truscott Whalen, or College Boy, was easily the most handsome man present. Like his partner, he was young, broad of shoulder, and narrow of hip.

Barring the over-emphasis of his chin, his face was almost classic in contour. Tawny hair, with a wave in it, crowned a high forehead, and set off the clear greyness of his long-lashed eyes.

He was husky as well, this College Boy; not a sign of effeminacy about him. He moved easily but with the swift decision of an athlete in condition.

A fresh colour came to his cheeks, and when he was smiling, as now, there was something engaging about him which men found it as hard to resist as women—or almost.

"What's the matter Lola?" he asked. "Something eating you? You'll be missing your step, before you know about it."

"I'm not sitting right on top of the world, Boy," Lola admitted. "Listen! When I speak to you again, be sure and smile, just like you did just now. I don't know what may be watching us."

"That's all right with me," he said. "It sounds bad, though, the way you introduce it."

She danced a few steps, before making any reply to this; and then, in a low, guarded voice, she made her announcement.

"The High Spot—Braley," she said slowly. "Smile, Boy! He was taken for a ride by Sacchini, just ten minutes ago. That's right, hold that smile."

"Braley!" College Boy repeated presently, in a choking voice. "Well, what of it?"

"What of it?" the girl mocked. "Who comes next? Think I'm not wise to you? You poor kid!"

They danced in silence for a full minute, while College Boy digested what he had heard.

"Listen! Lola went on, in her terrible guarded whisper. "Fingers told me to tell you, Sacchini aims to be High Spot, and you know what that means for you. Fingers says to pass the word, and they'll shoot it with Sacchini. What do I tell him?"

The music stopped suddenly, and the dancers came to a standstill. The cessation of the mechanical exercise affected College Boy so that he staggered a little, and Lola had to straighten him.

"Here," she said, assuming command. "Take me up to Room Seven, and get in a bottle of wine. Let them say what they like; I'm crazy about you, anyway, and I don't care who else knows it, if you do."

"Same here," Boy said. "Me; I'm crazy about you."

"Don't lie," Lola ordered, as they walked, arm linked in arm, up a stairway softly carpeted.

"You're crazy about nobody but your sweet self. Ain't that so?"

An obsequious foreign waiter brought wine, then with a leer and a gesture indicating discretion, he pussy-footed away.

"What does it matter?" Lola asked simply, answering College Boy's scowl as he shut the inner door. "Talk softly, Boy, and nobody can listen here. What do I say to Fingers?"

"You've got me wrong," College Boy said, slipping an arm about her. "I am crazy about you, Lola; and I know nothing about shooting. Nothing at all."

"You poor kid!" Lola repeated.

Pretty Wedding At Most Holy Redeemer Church

Amid a setting of white gladioli and chrysanthemums in the Church of the Most Holy Redeemer, Tuesday, October 14th, Mary Carmel MacAulay, of United Hospital, Port Chester, New York, daughter of Mrs. Agnes MacAulay and the late John D. MacAulay, became the bride of Edward Frances Seisdedos, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Seisdedos, of 86 Waller Ave., White Plains, New York.

The Rev. Wilfred MacCardle officiated at the ceremony and performed the nuptial mass. Soloist at the church was Mr. Frank MacIntyre, accompanied on the organ by Mr. Alexander MacLean.

A reception for 45 guests followed at the Queen Hotel.

The bride, given in marriage by her brother, Mr. John MacAulay, wore a gown of white imported French Chantilly lace over satin fashioned with a fitted lace bodice and a modified off-the-shoulder illusion neckline, long sleeves ending in points at the wrists and a bouffant skirt. Her fingertip length French illusion veil was gathered to a matching cap and she carried a bouquet of fern, Time roses with maiden hair fern.

Mrs. Reginald Rodgers of St. Andrew's, N. B. the bride's sister, was honour attendant. She was attired in a gown of Nile green net over taffeta with matching hat and mitts and she carried a nosegay of pink mums and roses.

The bridesmaids, Mrs. Gertrude Balsam, sister of the bride, and Miss Bernice Haughey, Port Chester, New York, were dressed in gowns of orchid and gold net over gossamer with matching hats and mitts and carried nosegays of mums and roses.

Mr. Salvatore Rubino of Pleasantville, New York, was best man. The ushers were Mr. Arthur Gibson, of Rye, New York and Mr. Reginald Rodgers of St. Andrew's, N. B.

Following the reception the newlyweds left by car on their honeymoon through the New England States and Montreal, after which they will reside at 23 Old Monroeneck Rd., White Plains, New York.

For travelling the bride chose a cocoa brown tailored suit with dark brown accessories, fur cape and a corsage of pink carnations.

The bride, who is on the nursing staff of the United Hospital, Port Chester, N. Y., is a graduate of the Charlotetown Hospital School of Nursing. The groom is an alumnus of Fordham University College of Pharmacy in White Plains, New York.

Out of town guests included Mr. and Mrs. Edward Seisdedos, White Plains, N. Y., Mr. and Mrs. Henry Regleman, Long Island, N. Y., Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Gibson, Rye, New York, Mr. Salvatore Rubino, Pleasantville, New York, Miss Bernice Haughey, Port Chester, N. Y., and Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Rodgers, St. Andrew's, N. B.

Happiness For Two
"Honey," said the husband, "I would be the happiest man in the world if you could bake bread like my mother used to bake."

"I know," his wife agreed thoughtfully. "But you know dear, you would make me the happiest woman alive if you could just make dough like my Dad used to."

Terrifying Prospect
An American visitor was very pleased with the pro-N. A. T. O. sentiments expressed by a class of Danish school children and complimented the teacher. "How did you do it?" she inquired. "Did you appeal to their patriotic sentiments?"

"Much simpler," the teacher replied. "I just wrote out the entire Russian alphabet on the blackboard."

For Tomorrow
CONFLICTING auguries are found in this day's forecast. While there are signs of sudden disruption, with far-reaching and critical climax, these are emphasized by sinister, malevolent and treacherous side issues.

Hidden dangers are present, as well as forthright malicious attempts to undermine or perhaps to force or maneuver into false positions. However, we have the ever benign and saving grace of Jupiter, the "eleventh-hour friend." It may be as well to assist in such efforts to save the day by postponing vital decisions until the coast is clear of vipers and snipers.

For the Birthday
Those whose birthday it is are urged to keep alert to a rather sinister and treacherous development of affairs, in which sordid and subtle ways of attack may undermine and distress. This may occur in a very malevolent manner, in which deep-laid schemes might have searing reactions on life, disposition, reputation. Deception, fraud, slander and vile inuendo may be the implement of treachery, but these may be circumvented by a staunch stand for the solid, true and righteous. Integrity and a benign intervention may, in the end, draw the venomous teeth of the dragon, with friendly Jove laughing up his sleeve.

A child born on this day may need early training in honor, decency and probity to offset a vicious tendency.

DOROTHY DIX'S COLUMN

Actions Or Words?

Boy Mentions Marriage But Sees Other Girl

DEAR MISS DIX: I have just started college and, while people may think I'm too young to go steady, I have decided on one boy. However, he is five years older than I and my parents think he is too old. Also, although he has mentioned marrying me, he is going with another girl. Should I let him go with her and say nothing, or should I show him I'm jealous?

J. W.
ANSWER: Actions speak much louder than words, and if a man declares his love for you one minute, and is out with another girl the next—well, which is more convincing, his actions or his words? A young man sincerely in love has no eyes for any but his beloved. Fidelity is prima facie evidence of love; don't settle for anything less.

WOULD SELL COINS
DEAR MISS DIX: I have in my possession some old coins that I would like to sell. Could you tell me where I could take them?

P. N.
ANSWER: Your city, I am sure, has a stamp and coin dealer, who would be glad to look over your collection. Locate him through the classified pages of your telephone book. If you are unsuccessful in getting the information you want, send me a self-addressed, stamped envelope and I'll send you the names of some reliable dealers who will be happy to appraise your coins.

DEAR MISS DIX: For nine months I have been going steady with a boy who is in service. He is now stationed in Texas. He came home in August, which was the first time I had seen him in eight months. While he was away I had been going with other boys—just to a dance, or the movies. When Stan came home I told him all about it, and he was very angry. He did get over that though. While he was home, he was entertained often by the family of a buddy from the same branch of service. The family has a very pretty 17-year-old daughter and, on the last night of his leave, Stan took her out to dinner and a show. I was so mad I wouldn't speak to him. After he returned to Texas, he wrote and said he had taken her out as a token of appreciation for all the family had done for her out. He claimed I should apologize for the way I acted. I don't think I should. Who is right?

BETTY
ANSWER: One of the major troubles with this world, Betty, is that too many people spend too much time worrying over who is right in situations as simple as this one. Through your whole story there is vein of "lit for tat", so in the long run, who has been the offender and who should do the apologizing? Quite a question, that!

I shall assume, for your sake, though you made no mention of it, that your dates with other boys during Stan's absence were known to him. If you dated, and didn't tell him, you are guilty of deception as well as lack of consideration. You mention that
